U.S. Latin Offer Seen as a Ploy Managua's Expected Rejection Could Assure Contra Aid

WASHINGTON - As it has before, the Reagan administration offered its latest Central American peace plan in the full expectation that Nicaragua would reject it, several administration officials

That scenario, White House officials said, would help assure the approval in Congress of renewed aid to the contras. Under the plan, which was put forward Wednesday, the United States would press ahead with aid to the contras unless Nicaragua accepted a cease-fire and democratic reforms.

The strategy has worked before. When President Ronald Reagan offered a Nicaragua peace plan in April 1985, the Sandinist foreign minister, the April 1985, the Sandinist Toreign minister, the Reverend Miguel d'Escoto Brockmann, waited not even 24 hours before declaring: "What President Reagan bas said is: "You drop dead or I will kill you." Formal rejection followed a day later, and Congress approved $27 million in nonmilitary aid to the contras less than two months after that.

Nicaragua was not so quick to condemn the latest plan — realizing, a government adviser said, that a quick rejection would play into the White House's hand and perhaps tip the balance in Congress in favor of renewed contra aid.

[President Daniel Ortega Saavedra of Nicaragua said Thursday that refusal by the United States to negotiate directly with his government would make President Reagan's new peace initiative "a

In Washington, Secretary of State George P. Shultz responded coolly to Mr. Ortega's proposal for the two countries to bold discussions on Mr.

"I think it is critical to establish that there is no way the United States would want to sit down with Nicaragua to decide what is right for Central America," Mr. Shultz said. "That has to be done by all the Central American countries."

Father d'Escoto, speaking Wednesday in Guatemala, said, "I have profound suspicion over anything Reagan does." But in Washington, the Nicaraguan ambassador. Carlos Tunnermann Bernheim, said, "We find several very positive and interesting elements" that "we can work with and can be improved."

that many cargo vessels had put off berthing at Gulf ports because of the holiday, but that in competitive oil tanker charter markets, ships continued to ply Gulf waters, carrying an average of seven million to eight million barrels of oil a day.

About 65 tankers were moored outside the Gulf awaiting chartering or replenishing, or acting as floating storage, agents said. It was estimated that since Tues-

At JFK, an End to 'Abysmal' Delays

Immigration Trims Waiting Time for Foreign Visitors

By Elizabeth Neuffer New York Times Service

NEW YORK - The excruciating delays foreign travelers have experienced getting through immigration at Kennedy International Airport have been drastically reduced this summer, according to travelers, federal authorities and airport officials.

For years, foreigners have complained of lengthy waits in immigration inspection lines. Last summer, when the delays grew to as long as four hours, members of Congress, airline executives and local government officials publicly criticized immigration procedures, saying the delays were among the worst in the world.

Some returning Americans, who bypass immigration and have their passports and purchases checked by Customs Service inspectors, were also delayed last summer, with airlines sometimes keeping passengers on planes until logiams eased.

The Immigration and Naturalization Service said it had reduced waiting time generally to less than an hour for foreign visitors, by hiring more inspectors with funds provided by a new $5 user fee placed on most international travelers by Congress. Revised procedures and additional inspectors have also speeded customs processing, officials say.

"Last year, the lines were just abysmal," said Representative Charles E. Schumer. Democrat of New York, who is a critic of the airport delays. "I think the situation is considerably better. There's room for improvement, but we're not in danger of chasing business or tourists away from New York."

But airline representatives, while welcoming the improved service, said some passengers still encountered delays of up to two hours in immigration, before they proceed to customs. And travelers say that it still takes much longer to be processed at Kennedy than it does at many European airports.

The recent improvement comes as more and more foreign travelers are flying into Kennedy, New York City's primary international airport. Last month. 430,000 foreign visitors arrived at Kennedy, 24 percent more than in July of last year, airport officials

On a recent Saturday, Mila Lopez, a 20-year-old model who was arriving from Switzerland, was surprised by the speed of the line through immigration at cennedy's international arrivals building. "There's so many people, I thought I'd stand there for two hours or more," she said. "But it only took about 45 minutes."

The number of immigration inspectors at Kennedy has been increased by a third, from 150 last year to 206 this year, said Mary Ann Gamer, the immigration service's area port director. In addition, 115 temporary customs inspectors were hired this summer, officials

Shevardnadze Stands Firm On Removal Of Pershings

By Paul Lewis

GENEVA - The Soviet foreign minister, Eduard A. Shevardnadz called Thursday for the removal of U.S. nuclear warheads from West Germany's Pershing 1-A missiles and accused Bonn of undermining the Nuclear Nonproliferation

In a hard-line speech to the 40-nation United Nations Disarmameni Conference that contained no hint of compromise, Mr. Shevardnadze said that West Germany, by trying to retain the missiles, was violating the 1958 treaty, which prohibits signatory countries from acquiring nuclear weapons.

He said Germany's insistence on keeping the missiles was the principal obstacle to an agreement nating both superpowers' short-and medium-range nuclear arse-

"Seventy-two U.S. nuclear warheads now stand between us and an agreement on intermediate and shorter range missiles," said Mr. Shevardnadze, speaking on the an-niversary of the U.S. bombing of Hiroshima 42 years ago. "We have done all in our power. We have removed everything that could stand in the way of an agreement." He added: "Our partners have found the snags. The main one is the Pershing 1-A missile."

U.S. disarmament negotiators reacted to Mr. Shevardnadze's speech by accusing him of trying to "intimidate" West Germany.

A U.S. official said: "The Federal Republic of Germany, facing massive conventional and nuclear weapons from the East, is understandably concerned about its security. We share that concern, as does the whole NATO alliance."

The official described the Soviet foreign minister's speech as "posi-tive" insofar as it acknowledged that a nuclear missile agreement was close. The official urged a reduction in the "level of rhetorical offensive" and a return to "serious and quiet negotiation."

In an bourlong address, Mr. Shevardnadze warned that if Germany insisted on keeping the Pershings, the Soviet Union would match them in Eastern Europe, rendering the proposed disarmament agreement "truncated, emasculated and

His unyielding stance came in advance of expected talks with the senior U.S. arms negotiator, Max M. Kampelman, who flew in from Washington for the meeting, U.S officials said the speech appeared to rule out any quick compromise on the German missile issue at the disarmament discussions here.

Because of an editing error by The New York Times, an article in Tuesday's editions misstated the comments of a Soviet arms negotiator on a possible compromise involving short-range Pershing 1-A missiles. Some arms-control experts have suggested a compromise under which West Germany would keep the missiles, which have U.S. warheads, in return for assurances that, when obsolete, they would not be replaced. The Soviet official, Alexei A. Obukhov, said that while the United States had not made such a proposal, Moscow would consider one if it were four holding centers. Owen Quits Merger Vote

LONDON — David Owen re-signed Thursday as leader of the Social Democratic Party after the membership went against his wishes and voted to merge with the Liberal Party.

The two parties bad campaigned logether as the Alliance in the last two parliamentary elections but made bitle headway against the governing Conservatives and the socialist Labor Party. The Alliance won only 22 seats the June 11 election, four for the Social Democrats and 18 for the Liberals, and since then the two have been racked by an intense debate over whether to merge. The Social Democrarie Party's 58,000 members were asked to vote by mail on a merger, and the results Thursday showed 57.4 percent for merger and 42.6 percent against.

Mr. Owen, 49, announced within an hour that he would not lead the Social Democrats during merger talks, expected to take at least six months

"Ours is a democratic, one-member-one-vote party." Mr. Owen said. "The members have decided. as they have every right to do, to seek a merger with the Liberals against my advice, and in the circumstances I do not believe I should continue as their leader during the period of negotiations."

David Steel, the Liberal Party

leader, had strongly urged a merger after the June election. Mr. Owen, however, argued that merger was more likely to lead to disunity, because the two parties have different platforms.

The Liberals will consider the merger issue at their annual party conference in mid-September.

Camdessus: Right on Rich

The new managing director of the Inter-national Monetary Fund, Michel Camdessus, rightly urges all rich countries, even those in deficit, to do more to ease the debts of the poor. Third World debt is vast, and partly unpayable, unless governments change policies. That is wby this debt currently sells at big discounts and why banks shrink profits to make reserves against it. But the changes needed are two-fold. Debtors won't benefit from action by the rich without lasting efforts to help themse New money won't help debtors who shirk the reforms needed to raise efficiency and open the road to ultimate viability. They have to reduce inflation, public overspending and sheer waste. By land reform and realistic price policies, they have to stimulate food output (the possibilities are huge) so that they feed clves and export food. Reform is painful to the privileged. But its absence makes the pain worse, because all the foreign meney so laboriously gained just flows out again into the stock markets of the rich.

The performance of the poor is mixed. Countries like Zamhia are backsliding. There is promise in Argentina, perhaps Brazil, and several African and Asian countries. One should not overestimate how far young de-mocracies, with populism and the military never far round the corner, can go. But they have to step up the pace if the rich are to provide them with more funds to service their debts and maintain reasonable growth.

How should the rich provide the funds? Faster growth would enable debtors to sell them more goods. But the rich are growing slowly, so there is increasing disinclination to admit manufactures from the poor and duce are weak. Alternatively, the rich can provide the poor with more capital. This is not happening: the volume of net financial flows to developing countries fell 15 percent in 1986. But it could happen, in a better world, through three mechanisms.

Banks could extend new loans. They are slow to do this because they question how long debtors will be able to pursue their stabilization plans. And if business in the rich world stays slack, how can borrowers be credit-worthy. Alternatively, the rich could increase their equity investment in the debtors — the best solution of all. But good openings are scarce, because profitability seems low as long as the world teeters towards recession, and because too many debtors sby from foreign control of their indus-tries. The bottom line is for the rich to raise non-ma: ket financial flows: more development aid, often on concessional terms, and increasing the lending of agencies like the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank. The volume of such aid fell last year. This is where the Camdessus doctrine is an invaluable antidote to the present lassifude of the developed world. Rich countries slash aid because the lobbying for it is weak and because poor countries are thought to be taking jobs away from the rich countries. Few recall that greater aid would increase jobs because the recipient countries would spend what they gain. Aid is currently so low, and the rich so much richer than the poor, that it could be vastly increased with scarcely a macro-economic ripple. The rich wouldn't lose. INTERNATIONAL HERALD TRIBUNE.

Nicaragua: Plan or Ploy?

What might be called the Arias-Wright-Shultz-Baker-Reagan peace plan for Central America represents progress, inside the administration at least, it offers a gleam of hope that President Reagan and his aides realize the need for negotiations, and perhaps even for compromises, to end a hitter conflict within and with Nicaragua. The pity is the taint of coming so late in the Reagan presidency—and so soon before a showdown vote in Congress on aiding the Nicaraguan rebels.

Finally and wisely, the White House has made clearer its backing for the regional peace effort promoted by Costa Rica's president, Oscar Arias Sánchez. Yet it was all but compelled to do so. Congressional Democrats and moderate Republicans have joined in applauding Mr. Arias's idea of a regional cease-fire meshed with steps to democracy. The idea has developed some support in Central America, as attested by the regional meeting under way in Guatemala. And all this is happening on the eve of a September showdown over voting another $100 million plus in military aid to the contras.

With this in mind, the House Speaker, Jim Wright, proposed a crucial modification in the Arias plan. The White House had objected that in return for an actual cease-fire. Nicaragua was asked only to promise steps to democracy. Mr. Wright proposes simultaneous deeds by a Sept. 30 target date: cease-fire, restoration of freedoms, a halt to outside military aid and to U.S. maneuvers in Honduras. His proposal was taken up by Secretary of State George Shultz and Howard Baker, the White House chief of staff. They have evidently persuaded President Reagan to go along.

gress has to be clear-eyed. The administration's record of hostility to compromise has to give pause. This is the first time in seven years that Mr. Reagan has put his name to terms that fall short of demanding that the Sandinists surrender power. Hence the suspicion that he has put forward the peace roposal in the expectation of its failure.

The bleak prospects for negotiations have to be faced, even as the bargaining is earnest-ly pursued. Even with Mr. Reagan's support, negotiated settlement in Nicaragua, or El Salvador for that matter, will be extremely difficult to arrange. Adversaries in civil wars tend to demonize each other. And since personal, not just political, survival hangs on the outcome, adversaries are bound to hang back. By no reasonable measure is there time in 60 days to resolve bitter conflicts. Congress thus has to avoid being squeezed into voting large aid commitments for the con-tras if peace is not achieved by October. Democratic leaders, including Mr. Wright, insist they have made no such pledge.

By all means let Congress welcome Mr. eagan's recent conversion to diplomacy, but keep up the pressure that brought it about. Whatever the progress in Central American bargaining, Congress has to de-mand hard information about the contras, their failure to develop visible support within Nicaragua and their buman rights abuses. now documented by the administration's own investigators. And Washington has to keep the faith with all of Central America's democrats - including the internal opposinon in Nicaragua — in opposing thuggery from every quarter, Sandinist or contra.

If the Reagan administration has come to appreciate these complexities, then a serious - THE NEW YORK TIMES.

Foreign Aid Shell Game

The U.S. foreign aid program is being ground up by the hudget process. Just about everyone agrees the appropriated Until that is settled the proper course funds aren't enough to support U.S. policies abroad and are poorly distributed be-sides; ton large a share, nearly 40 percent, goes to Israel and Egypt. Other recipients, equally worthy, are being pushed aside.

The administration's response is that, here as with defense, Congress should extract the necessary funds from other areas of government: domestic programs. But these already have been pretty well plucked, and the Democrats rightly say that the president should finance his defense and foreign policies with a tax increase. The

Adelman Confounded Critics

Kenneth Adelman's impending resignation as director of the U.S. Arms Control and Disarmament Agency will be less noisome than his arrival, in one of the roughest confirmations seen in Congress; Senator Alan Cransion of California called it "a victory for the enemies of arms control within the Reagan administration."

Some victory. Under Mr. Adelman, the ACDA gained ground on the first real reduction in nuclear armaments. None of Mr. Adelman's predecessors even came close to this objective. would be to reallocate the funds now available, to spread the shortage, But Congress and the president each find it useful to chide the other for squeezing the vulnerable recipients, and neither can bring itself to propose a cut for Israel. An example occurred in the markup of the current foreign aid appropriations bill last week. The House subcommittee chairman, David Obey, Democrat of Wisconsin, proposed minor cuts in aid from last year's levels for both Israel and Egypt, For Israel, $36 million out of a $3 billion total; for Egypt. $26 million out of $2.1 billion. He did it not for great and lofty policy reasons. not even particularly in the name of fairness but, as he himself admits, in an old-tashoned effort to circumvent the congressional accounting rules and get a larger program for a smaller appropriation.

Some appropriations, including aid to Israel and Egypt, are spent relatively quickly, others not. Under the rules, Mr. Obey could appropriate more if be shifted money from fast-spending accounts to slow, and that's what he was proposing. The small amounts taken from Israel and Egypt, plus some other such maneuvering, would have translated into about $765 million more for other beneficiaries, be estimates. But the chairman says that 1) the administration balked and 2) so, as the word leaked out, did any number of congressmen, who begged him not to put them on the rack with his proposal, which he finally dropped. It was not an inspiring show.

Moscow Tries 'Bait-And-Switch' Arms Tactic

By Richard N. Perle

WASHINGTON — If the trans-action concerned the purchase of a washing machine the technique would be called "bait-and-switch," and it would be illegal. But as it concerns the security of the United States and the cohesion of the Western alliance, it's called "diplomacy" — and, bowever objectionable, it isn't illegal.

The issue, of course, is a last-mintate Soviet demand that the West Germans scrap their 72 older Pershing-1A missiles (the "switch") as a condition for a treaty eliminating intermediate missiles from the arsenals of the United States and the Soviet Union (the "bait"). The essence of the bait-and-switch tactic is that the customer is brought to the hrink of a purchase only to be told that the deal he was about to make is no longer available. At this point a higher-priced alternative is brought out in the expectation that the hapless cus-tomer, his heart set on a new washing machine, will pay the premium rather than go home empty-handed.

Mikhail Gorbachev evidently believes that Ronald Reagan has his heart set on a treaty eliminating intermediate missiles — Mr. Reagan's own proposal of 1981 — and therefore will pay the added price rather than jeop-ardize the deal. The premium the Sovi-et Union is demanding in this case would require the United States to bargain away a weapon that belongs to its German allies. Soviet strategists figure that German confidence in the United States would be gravely damaged as a result and the already fragmented coalition in Bonn would come under new and dangerous strains. (The Russians caught an enticing glimpse of German angst over these matters when a minor issue, the treatment of shorter-range missiles the United States doesn't have, paralyzed the Kohl administration for weeks while Mr. Gorbachev rang propaganda bells throughout Europe.)

The justification the Soviet Union offers for this mischievous maneuver is the fact that the warheads for the German missiles are under U.S. control (would Moscow prefer them in German hands?), even though the missiles are not. But the treaty that is now taking shape in Geneva does not limit warheads; it limits missiles and launchers. One reason for this is the impossibility of verifying warheads, small and concealable as they are. An-other is that the German Pershings reflect what, in the special parlance of walk out of the Geneva talks in 1983 rather than submit to their demands that British and French nuclear forces be included, along with those of the United States, in a bilateral agreement between Washington and Moscow. Florence Nightingale is said to have commented that "whatever else they do, hospitals must not spread disease." And whatever else arms control agreements may accomplish, they must not undermine the political cohesion of the Western alliance. That cohesion is invariably put to the test when the superpowers negotiate arrangements that affect the security of the U.S. allies. Here the Soviet Union enjoys one of many advantages in negotiation with the United States, its docile allies - tranquilized when necessary by a dose of Soviet power --- are not given to effective complaint, even when Moscow treats their security with indifference. The Czechs and East Germans may have chafed when the Soviet Union wheeled in SS-22 missiles as a "response" to U.S. Pershing-2 deployments in West Germany, but they chafed silently.

For the United States it is essential that arms control negotiations with the Soviet Union be conducted in a manner that protects mutual confidence hetween Washington and its allies. Soviet efforts to lure the president into compromising Allied forces are calculated to destroy that confidence and turn a militarily balanced and equitable agreement into one that is politically damaging to both.

This is not the first time that the Soviet Union has proposed a measure that tested American resolve and Allied nerves. At one time or another the Soviet negotiators have held an INF zero option agreement hostage to 1) inclusion of British and French forces and U.S. maritime weapons; 2) the U.S. SDI program; and 3) Soviet missiles in Asia. Each time the United States has stood its ground and, in due course, the Soviet Union has shifted its. That is why, after nearly six years, we are close to an agreement that is fair to both sides.

In Latin America, There's No 'Good' U.S. Intervention

By Adolfo Aguilar Zinser

WASHINGTON - In view of recent events in South Korea and earlier events in the Philip-pines and Haiti, Americans are newly optimistic that leverage can be used to promote political pluralism and civilian democracy in friendly, authoritarian regimes, Proponents of such activism think that moving swiftly during a political crisis will prevent radical, pro-communist revolutions. This benevolent intervention is perceived to be in the best interest of the United States, even if it means disappointing a former ally or pressuring a longtime friend. Panama now seems to offer the U.S. Congress and the Reagan administration a perfect testing ground to take this "good" intervention approach to Laun America.

Following demonstrations against the country's strongman. General Manuel Antonio Noriega, the Senate and the House of Representatives approved resolutions demanding a return to civilian control in Panama and an investigation into allegations of murder and corrup-tion leveled against General Noriega by a former military associate.

The U.S. attacks on General Noriega have provoked a rare display of unity among Latin American gov-ernments. The answer is certainly not the pop-ularity of the General Noriega, whose image in Latin America is that of a "loose cannon" incapable of loyalty to answer that Latin Americans do not care whether or not Panamanians fulfill their democratic ambinions. The problem is the credibility of the Unit-cions than the Reagan administration's unyielding support for the Nic-araguan rebels. The clear objective of contra aid, as Latin Americans see it, is to overthrow a government the United States does not like, but with. which it has diplomatic relations. Obviously this is an unacceptable proposition to any poorer, weaker neighbor. Even Latin Americans who do not like the Sandinists and would prefer to see them turned out of power find the American replacement a rebel force funded and controlled by the CIA - as bad as could be.

Antipathy to revolutionary Nicaragua in many countries of Central and Latin American does not translate into enthusiasm for the contra cause. Few American commentators have tried to explain why no president, ma-jor politician or visible intellectual of Latin America has put himself or berself on the record endorsing contra aid. Many have harshly criticized the Sandinists and prized the internal op- reforms - including the suspension of the Nicaraguan rebels. To support them is to endorse CIA-sponsored intervention. No Latin American preoccupied with his or her personal reputanon can favor such a policy.

In Latin culture, to trust is to share.

But the United States has made no the post-Sept. 30 "national reconcilieffort whatever to take account of Latin American concerns, ideas and feelings in its policy-making. Instead, the Reagan administration adopted the patronizing view that America knows mestic political acceptance for the best what will cure Latin ailments.

When the eight most important countries of the region assembled in Contadora to say "no" to contra aid and to propose broad-based negotia-tions as an alternative to military solutions - or when a long-time friend such as Costa Rica proposed the same thing — the administration ignored them or called them naive. If the U.S. government does not trust our judgment, why should we Latin Americans trust Washington's?

U.S. credibility in Latin America will not be rebuilt by theories of "good" intervention. Instead, Washington must shed its chronic decision of Latin American opinion and learn to trust - and to use - the political advice of its neighbors. Today, "good" U.S. intervention in Latin America remains no intervention at all.

Convenient 'Peace Plan' Won't Work

By Tom Wicker

NEW YORK — If Ronald Rea-gan is serious about his new "peace plan" for Nicaragua, he must think its Sandinist government can he intermident disease siving up its indebe intimidated into giving up its independence, its power and its Marxist world view. If, as is more likely, Mr. Reagan's plan is just a ploy to win votes for renewed military aid to the CIA-organized and CIA-controlled contras in Nicaragua, a Congress burned once too often should be able to see right through it.

Either way, as President Lyndon ohnson used to say of losing propositions, That dog won't hunt.

The plan, drafted for the admiristration by a Democrat, Jim Wright of exas, the House speaker, calls for an immediate cease-fire, followed by the cessarion of aid to either side from the United States, Cuba and the Soviet Union, and the acceptance of democratic reforms by the Sandinists before Sept. 30. A regional settle-ment and a national reconciliation plan for Nicaragua then would be worked out by the United States and the Central American governments. Mr. Wright apparently regards this as something like a last chance for a peaceful settlement. But there are good reasons for other members of Congress to suspect that the White House adopted the plan as a vote-getting device — believing, that is, that if the Sandinists don't accept, Congress would be more likely to approve renewed aid to the contras.

Some members won't have forgotten, however, that Mr. Reagan has been at least as reluctant a negotintor as anyone in Managua. He found reaas anyone in Managua. He found tea-son to reject various peace plans put forward by the Contadora nations, and he rejected a Costa Rican propos-al somewhat similar to Mr. Wright's.

Members also will realize, as Senator Dale Bumpers, Democrat of Ar-kansas, has pointed out, that it's "un-realistic" to believe that such a complicated, bigh-stakes scheme could be negotiated before Sept. 30: and that this early deadline means also that the administration would not have to sacrifice much aid to the contras before then. Nor will it be lost on anyone that the new proposal conveniently arrives just before the present program of contra aid expires.

For such reasons, the plan may not be as effective as the White House expects in swinging congressional votes to the contras — although its diplomatie prospects certainly seem dim. The plan would require the San-dinists to agree to "reforms" they have rejected before, and ultimately to accept politically the contras who seek to overthrow their government.

Besides, if the Sandinists have established any single point, it is that they have not been intimidated either by U.S. support for the contras or by what they perceive as the threat of direct U.S. intervention. Just as the Iranians have refused to quake before American naval power in the Gulf, the Sandinists have made clear their determination to defend the Nicaraguan "revolution" against Mr. Reagan's determination to oust or radi-cally change their regime.

the contras after Sept. 30 is unlikely to cause them to make the demanded position, but none has spoken in favor of emergency laws and steps toward open elections — when they have been unwilling to make them under the actual military pressures of the Reagan-aided contras. Even if the Sandinists did meet this > ation" plan to grant the contras full political rights, perhaps including entry into the government. By what measure of military success or docontras should the Sandinists agree to such a self-defeating proposition? All this strongly suggests that the White House is not offering a serious new negotiating proposal, but counts instead on a Sandinist rejection to bolster congressional support for aid to the contras. And even if Mr. Reagan genuinely wanted a negotiated settlement, this prescription would be fatally flawed by his insistence on those "democratic reforms." Whatever his doctrine, the United States has no historic or God-given mission to bring democracy to other nations; nor does such a purpose justify the overthrow of governments it does not like. U.S. security interests in Nicaragua are only to prevent establishment of a Soviet military base andor Nicaraguan aggression against neighbor nations — interests that could be served without the contras or the overthrow of the Sandinists. As long as it remains Mr. Reagan's policy to insist on both, that dog won't hunt either.

A Gulf Arms Embargo Could Work

ONDON — Cynics may laugh at U.S. attempts to introduce a United Nations Security Council resolution mandaring an embargo on arms sales to Iran and Iraq. Yet even those who sneer at efforts to make such an embargo stick in the volatile Middle East should pause a moment. There have been occasions when embargoes have worked, even in the Middle East. In the Middle Ages the nations of western Europe forged an under-Turks. In the 19th century non-slaving nations signed, in Brussels, an agreement to repress the African slave trade. It prohibited the introduction of arms and ammunition other than flintlock guns and powder into much of the African connnent. More relevant for the Iran-Iraq war was the tripartite declaration signed in 1950 by the United States, France and Britain to restrain arms sales in the Middle East in an attempt to lower tensions between the Arab states and Israel. It lasted five years, until the Soviet Union and Czechoslovakia concluded a big arms deal with Egypt and France secretly signed an agreement with Israel.

In 1967. Lyndon Johnson pro-posed that the United States and the Soviet Union limit arms sales in the Middle East, It is believed that Premier Alexei Kosygin responded with a secret letter supporting Mr. Johnson's plan, and the evidence suggests that there was a de facto slow down. Both Washington and Moscow sent far fewer arms to their clients there than they were asked for. Moreover, the supply of new, sophisticated weapons was halted. President Anwar Sadat of Egypt noted at the time that it was clear that a staleBy Jonathan Power the superpowers. There was some agreement between them about the level of arms supplies. The agreement unraveled in 1972, partly because of the rise of Middle East tensions and partly, it was said, because of the U.S. decision to sell F-4 fighter-bomber aircraft to Israel. Until recently there had been little backing for again limiting West-ern arms sales in the Middle East. This was partly because, as David Owen observed when he was Britain's foreign secretary, it was a relatively painless way of recycling pet-rodollars. Secondly, it was part of the currency of Middle East diplo-macy. President Jimmy Carter, when he negotiated the Camp Da-vid accords, offered further arms sales to induce Egypt and Israel to negotiate. Peace was bought at the price of raising the ante several times during the negotiations, but this was widely accepted as a good tactic, given the importance of what was finally agreed to.

Even in the heyday of U.S. arms selling to the shah's tran, when that was the largest single arms sales pro-gram in the world, few voices were raised against it. It was, said a Senate study, a bonanza, reducing unit costs on America's arms production lines. The question of what some successor regime might do with the arms that Iran was stockpiling was essen-tially taboo. So willing was the United States that the shah made no effort to reciprocate the favor. by moderating oil prices, for example, Instead, be was the leading exponent of mising prices.

Clearly, there has been a major turnaround in Washington's thinkmate — no peace, no war — suited ing. It certainly goes far deeper than the Reagan administration making amends for engaging in an arms-for-hostage deal with the Khomeini regime; for that, there is little sign of contrinon. Moreover, a UN arms embargo has the support of Britain and France, who are not moved by guilt, and who have done well financially in the arms busi-ness. The turnaround is one of real politik: For once, the major powers realize how dangerous arms selling has become for themselves, not just for the protagonists. The Soviet

that is stirring up passions it has little idea of how to control. What is surprising, perhaps, is that previous understandings on the Middle East having been private. this embargo is being sought at the UN. an organization that does not rank high in Mr. Reagan's favor. Part of the reason is the need to bring in China, a significant seller of arms to Iran, and part is the need to reaffirm that the United States is engaged in a broad-based approach so that the new arms dealers — Bra-zil, South Korea and Taiwan — will not feel free to have a field day.

To be sure, an arms embargo will not bring peace to the Gulf. This will depend on political movement toward compromise and accommoda-tion. But without restraint in selling arms there is less pressure toward peace. Moreover, at least an embargo will work to lessen the damage that can be done to outsiders, in particular the international shipping using the Gulf.

A UN arms embargo would be a clear sign that the major powers are going to take a step back this time. And that, in terms of the Middle East, is as good as a mile.

In a Land Without 'Glue,' Glasnost Won't Stick Long

By George F. Will:

WASHINGTON - Putting, as detente demands, the best face on Soviet behavior, we can say that glasnost has glitches, as current troubles with the Tatars show. But the truth is, those troubles are only the most recent recrudescence of a perennial Soviet problem — "the nationalities question" — that sets a severe limit on the scope of openess.

Tatar leaders were expelled recently from Moscow, where a few hundred of their kinsmen were demanding that their bomeland in the Crimean peninsula be recognized as autonomous. In 1944, 250,000 Tatars were deported to central Asia — perhaps 100,000 died — as punishment for alleged collaboration with the German invaders. The Kremlin's disproportionate response to the recent protest included accusations that U.S. diplomats had worked "to inspire na-tionalistic manifestations." Understandably, such manifestations rank high on a long but of "antisocial actions."

The Soviet Union is run by a minority, the Russians, that is declining numerically relative to many of the Soviet Union's other captive nationalities. Like most such minorities that govern resent-ful groups, the Russians are regarded as arrogant. They do indeed despise many other ethnic groups, including the Tatars, as being "Asiatic."

Soviet leaders often denounce this attitude. On Oct. 6, 1922, Lenin was too troubled by a toothache to attend a Central Committee meeting, but he sent a note: "I declare war to the death on Great-Russian Chanvinism. I shall eat it with all my healthy teeth as soon as I get rid of this damned tooth." He promised that the presidency of a crucial body "should go in turn to a Russian, a Ukrainian, a Georgian, and so forth." But it would take more than 100 "and so forths" to cover all the unmeltable ethnic groups scattered across the Soviet Union's 11 time zones.

Besides, the essence of the Soviet state was and is "democratic centralism" control by a party organized from above and run from the political center, Mos-

R ED Square demonstrations by Crimean Tatars for correction of the injustice done them have brought two things to the world's attention. First, they recalled Stalin's crimes against the smaller peoples of the Soviet Union; second, they showed that Moscow's claim to a successful solution to the nationality problem, for decades endlessly repeated, is nothing more than self-deception. The Tatars' protest comes only a few months after the violent suppression of a Kazakh revolt in Alma-Ata against Russian colonial policy, and after last month's freedom demonstration in Riga by young Latvians. - Neue Zürcher Zeitung (Zurich).

cow. This principle is incompatible with local autonomy, but the pretense is otherwise. In New York in 1960, Khrushchev said: The Soviet regime guarantees to all national minorities an unabridged right of secession, and the fact that no minority has exercised that right proves that no minority is ag-grieved. (In the late 1940s some people in Mongolia were just Jearning that the 1917 revolution had brought them into the Socialist motherland.)

There are today three kinds of nations One nation, the United States, is defined by assent to political principles of universal validity. Most nations are of a second kind. They evolved organically from the coalescence of religious, linguistic and cultural affinities. Then there are nations that are not really nations. They are aggregations of unreconciled groups hammered and held together by force. Yugo-slavia and some African nations are in this category, as is the Soviet Union.
The United States is uniquely a nation.

in Lincoln's precise phrase, "dedicated to a proposition." To become, say, truly British is a complex and protracted pro-cess. Diverse millions of immigrants have become full-fledged Americans in a morning, by assenting to its proposition. The Soviet regime funcies itself like the United States, founded on clear principles universally convincing to minds unclouded by ignorance. But Marxism is everything refuted by reality. Marxism is a 19th century pseudoscience that claims to lay bare the inner dynamic of history, a dynamic driven by economic conflict that changes with modes of production. Marxism, a "science" of conflict, can not accommodate the most striking fact of the late 20th century, the fact that ethnic assertion, not class struggle, is a prevalent form of conflict, from Mecca to Moscow.

But, then, the hope of communist uni versality — Workers of the World Unite!" — collapsed in August 1914, when socialists in the German Reichstas voted for credits to finance the war that was beginning. The solidarity of the international working class was a fiction. The particularities of life, the traditional affinities that are the glue of nations, were more powerful, more real than the categories spun by Karl Marx in the reading room of the British Museum.

The absence of such glue, the presence of powerful centrifugal forces within the Soviet Union, and the fact that the regime's substitute for cultural bomogeneify is a bankrupt ideology — all these factors mean that the Soviet regime can never be more than an occupying power sustained by force. Thus glasnost can never be more than a carefully controlled Kremlin tactic to confuse the West and motivate Soviet masses with a tantalizing mirage of freedom just over a

Finding Out About Peru — the Hard Way

at the beach when Sebastian's baby died. Mr. Thielman, an American volunteer, had come to Ite, an oasis of 600 people in the Penavian desert with no electricity and one telephone, to build a kindergarten. The death of this infant would teach him what people in the Third World have known for generations about how little they should expect from life.

Mr. Thielman, 23, had taken the day off and gone swimming with a priest and two nurses working in Ite. When they got back, Sebastian, a skinny 21-year-old, was waiting for them at the health post. He had been waiting for four hours, Sebatian's wife, Herenia, 19, had given birth that morning. He had delivered the child and cut the umbilical cord with a razor hlade. The baby was sick.

They went to Sebastian's house, a oneroom concrete structure, with two tiny windows and holes in the root. On the floor near the small bed where Sebastian. his wife and their older baby slept, were crusted cooking pots and a few pieces of clothing. Flies were everywhere.

The newborn was lying at the foot of the bed, wrapped in a filthy piece of cloth, dead, It had lived eight hours.

The baby had been born six weeks premature, the nurse told Mr. Thielman the next day. Herenia had been hitting her womh in hopes of aborting the child. The nurse had suggested in Herenia that she have this child, then begin to use hirth control, but Herenia said that she and Sehastian could not support the child they already had on his wages.

A week later, Mr. Thielman went back to Sebastian's house. Sebastian was earning 14 Peruvian intis (84 cents) a day, he said, in his joh as a farm worker. Where he had come from, in the mounBy Tina Rosenberg

His new project, the Center for the Working Child, is going well. wealthy man's house in Tacna.

Mauricio's father worked from 4

A.M. to 8 A.M. for no pay each day for the privilege of living in the house. There was no electricity, no beds and I did not see a hathroom, not even an outhouse.

A garden hose provided water. Mauricio's prize for winning the contest was a plane trip to Lima for a week of art classes, parties and political events with other winners. He was even going to meet President Alan Garcia Pérez. His mother didn't want him to 20. It was too far away, and she didn't like the idea of a plane trip. She had been persuaded it was a good idea, but she was wavering, and Mr. Thielman made the visit to lobby her one more time. She wept while she talked in us, rarely looking up. She held her smallest child, an 18-month-old girl dressed in a torn sweater and tights. The girl's eyes were dull with fever. She had been sick for three days. The mother said there was no money to take ber to a doctor. I tonk Mr. Thielman aside and asked him if we should offer to take them. "Go ahead," he said, as if suggesting that I, too, might learn something. "She'll say no." She did say no, but she let me buy some liquid aspirin.

"If that had been me last year," Mr. Thichman said as we left, "I would have said 'Oh my God, let's do something.' Now I know you have to try, ask the mother to bring the baby to the hospital, but if she doesn't, that's life. I see so many sick kids." He shrugged. For a second he sounded just like Oscar Galdos.

Grudging Vote in Italy Shows Coalition Frailty No one gives him much chance

By Loren Jenkins Washington Pest Service ROME - The instability of Giovanni Goria's reconstituted coalition bas been made clear by the grudging vote of confidence that the Chamber of Deputies gave his government. Mr. Goria, a Christian Democrat, who at 44 is Italy's youngest prime minister, won the chamber' support Wednesday for his fiveparty coalition government, but only after three days of often acer-bic debate that included such divergent subjects as Italy's Gulf policy and the propriety of President Francesco Cossiga's comination of Mr. Goria, a former treasury minister, as prime minister. Not only were Mr. Goria's proposed policies, on everything from nuclear energy to foreign affairs, questioned by the coalition's other parties, but his status and suitability for the joh were attacked by me members of his Christian Democratic Party.

The vote in the Chamber of Deputies was 371-237 in favor of the Goria government. The Senate approved the coalition last weekend. Thus for the first time since March 3, when Bettino Craxi, a Socialist, resigned after almost four years as prime minister, Italy has a cabinet that is not a caretaker gov-

Few analysis believe it will come anywhere near matching the longevity of the Craxi government, however, because none of the problems that led to the breakdown of Mr. Craxi's five-party coalition has been resolved.

After Mr. Craxi had led the coalition for almost four years, Mr. De Mita demanded that a Christian Democrat, prefera hly himself, be allowed 10 preside because the Christian Democrats were by far the largest party. Mr. Craxi refused to accept the gument. The ensuing deadlock led to the dissolution of the parliament and elections in June, in which both the Socialists and the Christian Democrats gained in strength at the cost of the Communist Party, Italy's second largest.

After the vote, bowever, Mr. De Mita's and Mr. Craxi's choices were limited to re-forming their coalition along with the minor Re-publican, Liberal and Social Democtatic parties.

The crisis in the Gulf has underscored what some here depict as ambiguities and vulnerabilities

One regional specialist said the Emirates have been closely tied to Iran, both politically and economically, and they see no interest in a permanent state of hostility with Tehran.

Nevertheless, the Emirates, fearing the destabilizing effect of Islamie revolution and shaken by the bloodletting in Mecca, have largely rallied to the Saudi royal family, Iran's traditional rival for dominance in the Gulf, in the days of the shah as well as today.

That tilt has exposed vulnerabilities to Iranian retaliation. For one thing, both Dubai and Sharjah have significant Iranian communities. At the same time, according to West European diplomats elsewhere in the region the Emirates, like other Gulf states face a deepening of the traditional schism between Sunni and Shiite Moslems. Iran's revolutionary leaders are Shiites.

The religious rift here is not thought to be as hazardous as elsewhere, since the Shiite population in the Emirates is estimated at about 5 percent, compared with 30 lage of Prime Minister Chou Enpercent in Bahrain.

E Pluribus Unum

The Edinburgh Festival (Aug. 9-31) is the usual cornucopia of the arts, with a heavy representation from the Soviet Union, a celebration of George Gershwin (including a concert performance of "Girl Crazy") on the 50th anniversary of his death, a survey of two centuries of the string quartet, and for the first time a resident orchestra—the Pittsburgh Symphony under Lorin Maazel and Micbael Tilson Thomas. The festival's second World Theater Season brings the Gorky Theater of Leningrad, the Micbael Tilson Thomas. The festival's second World Theater Season brings the Gorky Theater of Leaingrad, the Gate of Dublin, the Raun Raun Theater of Papua New Guinea, the Tblisi State Puppet Theater, the Berliner Ensemble, the Cameri Theater of Tel Aviv, the Yume no yuminsha company from Japan, the Royal Exchange of Manchester, and some of the festival's own productions. Dance offers the Ballet Théâtre Français with a homage to the Diaghilev Ballets Russes, folk dancers from the north of Russia, and a company from China with "The Soul of the Terracotta Army." Opera comes from Stockholm, Frankfurt and Helsinki. The Bolshoi Opera orchestra and the Scottish Chamber and National orchestras are among those joining the Pittsburghers, who will not are among those joining the Pittsburghers, who will not imply perform but tutor students and players in the region. The Melos Quartet of Stuttgart will do a Beethoven cycle, the Shostakovich Quartet plays the music of its namesake and other Russians, and the Ardim Quartet and others present the contemporary scene. Exhibitions include New Scottish Art. "A Celebration of Mary, Queen of Scots," David Salle and much more, and that does not even touch on the vast Fringe program.

Treasures of the New Kingdom

■ Under the title
"Aegyptens Aufstieg
zur Weltmacht" (Egypt's Rise to World Power), the Roemer-Pelizaeus Museum which itself has one of West Germany's richest collections of Egyptian antiquities has mounted an exhibition of archaeological treasures from . the period of the early New Kingdom (1550-1400 B.C.). In-than 300 exhibits from museums in Cairo, Paris, New York, East Berlin and elsewhere, as well as scale copies of tomb paintings. Running concurrently is a show of about 50 oils, lithographs and other works by the contemporary Egyptian artist and Egyptologist, Abdel Ghaffar Shedid, who incorporates images from ancient Egypt in his work. The shows run to Nov. 29.

An Eclectic Musical Feast

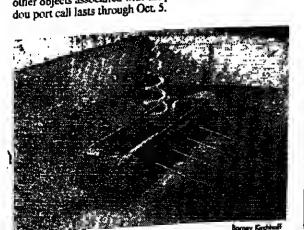

■ The Lucerne Festival (Aug. 15-Sept. 9) is one of the old established firms in the lestival business, and one of the few to depend mainly on concerts rather than theater. The programs take due note of anniversaries, among them the 50th of the deaths of Ravel, Roussel and Gershwin. including an exhibition that emphasizes the Swiss connections of Maurice Ravel and Albert Roussel. Music of beginning with Aaron Copland in the opening concerts. Leonard Bernstein is represented by his "Chichester Psalms," then he turns up in the flesh conducting the Vienna Philharmonic in Mahler, Sibelius and his own "Jeremiah" Symphooy, and other programs offer works by Charles Ives, Elliott Carter, George Rochberg, Irving Fine, Samuel Barber, Roger Sessions and Gunther Schuller. The Municipal Theater has a production (in German, of course) of Arthur Miller's "Peath of a Salesman." Exhibitions include Augusto Giacometti (1877-1947), a Swiss pioneer of abstract art and a major figure in the Symbolist movement, and the American photographer T.E. David Plowden. Both run until Sept. 20.

■ The 11th Festival Latino — the biggest Latin American cultural event in the United States and one of the most important showcases anywhere for Latin talent -runs through Aug. 23 with Latin American, Spanish and Hispanic-American theater, films and music at the Public Theater on Lafayette Street, the open-air Delacorte Theater in Central Park and the Metro Cinema on upper Broadway. Stage presentations, most with simultaneous interpre-vations in English through headphones, are at the Public. So is the Tribute to Argentine Cinema, spanning four decades of one of South America's most influential film centers. A movie festival at the Metro offers works from nine Latin American countries, all subtitled in English. Fifty hours of Spanish- and Portuguese-language television programs will be shown over local cable TV.

Oldenburg's Swiss Army Boat ■ Claes Oldenburg's 78-foot-long boat (24 meters) in the shape of a Swiss Army knife has docked in the center pit of the Pompidou Center. Oldenburg, the man who gave Chicago its giant baseball bat sculpture, devised the craft, which has four oars on each side, two blades that open and a corkscrew that serves as a mast, for a happening in Venice two years ago, and it has been floating around museums since. The boat originally was part of a three-person event called "Il Corso del Colteilo," with Coasje Van Bruggen and Frank O. Gehry. An exhibition in one of the Pompidou galleries shows costumes, sets and other objects associated with the performance. The Pompi-

A Gold Mine Of Inca History

A manuscript believed lost for 380 years contains details about the empire that are likely to cause a significant reappraisal of the era.

by Barry James

THEN Francisco Pizarro and his tiny band of Conquistadores marched into Peru and seized control of their empire. the defeated Incas, who had no written language of their own, had few friends to tell their side of the story.

One who did was Juan de Betanzos, a Spaniard from Valladolid who lived among the Inca nobles and compiled a detailed account of their history, legends, laws and customs. But Betanzos's manuscript disappeared 380 years ago, and only a fragment remained to intrigue historians.

Now, by chance, the complete document has reappeared. It was discovered in a private library in Palma de Mallorca by Mari Carmen Martin Rubio, profes-sor of American history at the Complutense University in Madrid. She said the manuscript contains details about the Inca empire and the first years of the Spanish conquest that are likely to cause a significant reappraisal of the period.

Fit is a version like no other," she said in a tele-

Betanzos learned Quechua, the Inca language, and married a princess, Kusi Rimay Occio, She had been destined to become the principal wife of Atahualpa, the last of the Inca emperors, but instead it is believed she became the mistress of Pizarro and had two children before marrying Betanzos. His marriage gave Betanzos access to the educated class of Inca nobles responsible for the collective memory of their race.

These were the quipu ramayor, the official interpreters of the quipu, a device of knotted, varicolored cords that was used as an aid in reciting narratives, histories and genealogies. The Incas controlled an empire they called Tawantisuyu stretching from mod-ern Ecuador to southern Chile, the distance from

"Betanzos lived in the Inca court and was sympa-thetic toward the nobles," Martin Rubio said. "He had a great respect and admiration for everything that inspired their culture."

He injected little of himself into the account, other than to lament the killing of Atahualpa and the destruction of the buildings at Cuzco. He generally remained behind the scenes, preferring to let the Incas tell their story in their own words. "His account is very impartial," Martin Rubio said. "That is one of the reasons it is so valuable."

Most other accounts from that period were by paniards about Spaniards, she said. Even the Inca historian, El Inca Garcilaso de la Vega, was writing from a Hispanicized point of view. He was the son of a Spanish nobleman and an Inca princess and spent much of his life in Spain. Pizarro's invasion already had taken place by the time he was born, and part of his sweeping history of Peru is based on secondary sources. Betanzos, however, was with the invasion from the start, and he relies entirely on the quipu

"Betanzos went to the primary sources and his chronicles differ substantially from the others," Martin Rubio said, "I think his is probably the more

The manuscript was written about 1551 on the orders of the viceroy, Antonio de Mendoza, who wanted to find out more about the ancient society the Spanish administration was taking over. It was sent back to Spain, and the original was last heard of in 1607 in a mention by Gregorio Garcia, a Dominican priest who wrote a catechism for the Incas.

A copy of the first 18 chapters detailing the formation of Cuzco and its government was conserved in the library of the monastery of El Escorial near Madrid. This provided valuable material for W.H. Prescou's highly readable but romanticized 19thcentury "History of the Conquest of Peru." Like most historians of the period. Martin Rubio was convinced the rest of the document had been destroyed. Some time ago, a friend sent her a clipping from a local newspaper that said a copy of Betanzos's book was in the library of the Bartolomé March foundation in Palma de Mallorca. She thought little of it, assuming the clipping referred to a copy of the 18 chapters

Nevertheless, she flew to Palma three months ago, saw the manuscript, and immediately realized she had stumbled onto something big.

Martin Rubio says there is no doubt the manuscript is genuine. The parchment dates from the 16th century, and the syntax, spelling and cramped, italic form of Castilian are all from that period. The 120-page manuscript contains all 82 original chapters.

Part ooe is the fragment already known. Part two describes the laws and social program of Pachacuti lnca Yupanqui, o great reformer among the Inca emperors. The third part details the war between Alahualpa and his brother, Huascar, for the throne of Cuzco: the death of Atahualpa, whom the Conquistadures strangled after he delivered a "king's ransom" of gold: and a subsequent revolt by the Inca leader

Manco Capac.

Martin Rubio says the manuscript presents a hith-erto unknown view of Pizarro and the Spaniards, whom the linear regarded as strange, corpulent beings hidden top to toe behind beards, heavy layers of clothes and boots. It describes a well-organized authoritarian Inca society in which the subjects were tightly controlled, but at the same time provided with comprehensive social security. "In some ways, the Incas reached a level we have to envy," Martin Rubio

"There is a huge quantity of detail, minutely told." The historian has prepared the manuscript for publication in Spain in two months, using her knowl-

publication in Spain in two months, using her knowledge of paleography to transcribe it ioto modern Spanish. "But I kept the original flavor," she added. The quipu camayoc spent four years learning Quechua, then the language of the Inca nobility, religion, the interpretation of the quipu and the history of their race. But Spanish bureaucracy and religion replaced the benign tyranny and theocracy of the Incas. The written word replaced oral tradition and the official memorizers faded away. Betanzos copied down their swansong. It was his, too, for nothing more is known

It appears the manuscript may have been in the possession of the Dukes of Medinaceli sioce its disappearance. The March Foundation acquired the Medinaceli library 20 years ago.

Bernstein, Boulanger: The Rite of Fontainebleau

by David Stevens

ARIS - A couple of weeks ago the Salle Pleyel was packed for a concert by the Orchestre de Paris, which is a considerable tribute to the drawing power of Leonard Bernstein, keeping in mind that by late July many Parisian melomanes have headed south and that by Bernsteinian standards he was making only a oneshot cameo appearance - coming on after the intermission to wind up the concert with one of his war-horses, Straviasky's "Rite of Spring."

But what this concert was really all about took place before the intermission, when three students of the conducting seminar at the Conservatoire Américain in Fontainebleau took their turns on the podium leading the orchestra in major works from the concert repertory. Bernstein, whose passion and genius for teaching are not less than for other aspects of his art. had spent four days working with the seminar stu-dents and the school's 46-piece orchestra in the Jeu de Paume of the Fontainebleau palace. Then be picked three of the 10 students to join him on the stage of the

The three he picked reflected the mix of nationalines among the conservatoire's students, for although the school was founded as a French school for Americans, it has long since ceased to have an exclusively American student body. Itay Talgam, a 29-year-old Israeli, took the orchestra through a neat reading of Prokofiev's "Classical" Symphony. Jean-Marc Burfin, a newly minted premier prix in conducting from the Conservatoire de Paris, had the toughest job — Copland's "Billy the Kid" suite. He did not quite get the Paris orchestra to sound idiomatic, but then Copland himself has had that trouble with French orchestras. ("A week ago be didn't know anything about Billy the Kid," Bernstein said with immense satisfaction after the concert.)

The third was a lanky 30-year-old American, Michael Barrett, who has already studied with Bernstein. among others, and has a fair amount of professional experience, all of which showed in the aplomb with which he conducted Ravel's second "Daphnis et Chloe" suite and accepted the ovation he got for it. It was lypical of Bernstein - who is a musical chameleon, at home in all idioms — to have a Frenchman conduct Copland and an American do Ravel.

The concert was a benefit for the Ecoles d'Art Américaines — the formal name of the conservatoire and its associate Ecole des Beaux-Arts. It also commemorated the 100th anniversary of the birth of Nadia Boulanger, who taught at the conservatoire from the time it was founded in 1921 until her death in 1979 and was its director for the last 30 years of her life. For good measure, this year also is the 50th anniversary of the deaths of two other noted French musicians who were directors of the conservatoire, Maurice Ravel and Charles-Marie Widor.

The purpose of this exercise was, of course, to honor the memory of Nadia Boulanger, but more important it was a highly visible sign of an effort under a new director. Jean-Pierre Marty - to redefine the mission of the Conservatoire Americain, 66 years after its creation and eight years after the death of the woman whose benevolent tyranny ruled the school for so long.

Cultural exchange was hardly the idea when General John J. Pershing asked Walter Damrosch, the conductor, educator and musical popularizer, to do something about improving the quality of musicians in the American Expeditionary Force. This led to the AEF Bandmasters and Musicians School at Chaumont under the French musician and pedagogue

Francis Casadesus, and with an all-French faculty. Casadesus was impressed by "the wonderful influer," and he was persuaded that "such natural, pure and agreeable relations" should cootinue after the hostilities in the form of a summer school at which American students could benefit from the tuition of professors of the Conservatoire de Paris.

With the support of the French government, the prefecture of the Seine-et-Marne department and the town of Fontainebleau, the school was given the use of the Louis XV wing of the palace, while Damroscb continued to collaborate enthusiastically from across

The target was 1921, although by March of that year Damrosch felt things were not moving quickly enough and tried to persuade Casadesus to delay opening until 1922, when there would be "several hundreds of eager young Americans ready to take advantage of such a splendid opportunity."

Nonetheless, the school was inaugurated on June 26, 1921, in the imposing presence of Camille Saint-Sains, then 86 and in the last year of his life. The heavyweight faculty included Francis Casadesus, Isidor Philipp for piano. Lucien Capet for violin, Albert Wolff for conducting and, in the younger ranks, a 34year-old teacher of solfege and harmony, Nadia Boulanger, and an assistant named Robert Casadesus, the 22-year-old nephew of Francis, then at the threshhold of his brilliant piano career. (Robert Casadesus was also later director of the conservatoire, and his widow, Guby, was on the faculty this year for master classes in Debussy and Chopin.)

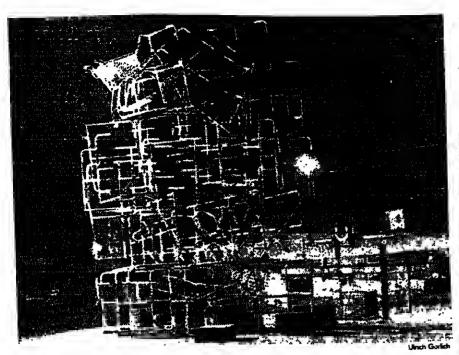

Also present were 85 eager young Americans, some of whom had come with the help of a 25 percent student fare cut by the French Line. One of them was a 20-year-old from Brooklyn named Aaron Copland. Copland discovered Nadia Boulanger at Fontainehleau and stayed on to study privately with her for three years in Paris, establishing a pattern that would he followed by so many Americans (although not only Americans I that a list of them would include a kind of honor roll of American composers since that time.

Widespread belief to the contrary. Bernstein's name would not be on that list. He did not study with her, but some of his musical education might well have come to him from Boulanger via others, and he certainly revered her for the same reason that Copland gave when he spoke at the school on its 15th anniversary - for ther attitude toward the whole art of music; I have never met anyone to whom music as an art meant so much."

For her part. Nadia Boulanger said she had met Bernstein only after he had finished his studies at Harvard, "but he was one of those pupils who can be taught very little because they have understood every-

by David Galloway

ERLIN - Startled eyebrows hovered over the rims of coffee cups, and wedges of Kuchen hung suspended in midair, From the plush interior of the storied Café Kranzler (also known as "the widows' rendezvous"), the work in progress seemed to threaten the worst. A tower of red-and-white street barriers, cobblestones and a Brobdingnagian supermarket cart rose precariously above the Kurfürstendamm. In Berlin the memory of street riots and demonstrations is evergreen, but here its symbols were more than doubled

The ominous proportions stressed the idea of an anti-monument -- not a celebration of heroism but a denunciation of urban violence. With the title "13.4,1981," sculptor Olaf Metzel recalled a day when demonstrations on the Kurfürstendamm ended with hundreds of broken shop windows, capsized automobiles and jumbled street lumiture. The bloody parade was prompted by a newspaper report (incorrect, it turned out) that an imprisoned terrorist bad died on hunger

That a gifted young sculptor who witnessed that event should conceive this "moral assemblage" bas an obvious poetic logic. Its placement on a cluttered intersection, on the other hand, denies both poetry and common sense. Berliners nurture a nostalgic image of the "Ku'damm" as a bustling bon viveur boulevard, but it has long since degenerated into a traffic-clogged architectural jurnble punctuated by sex shops and fast-birthday celebrations, the Kurfürstendamm claimed prominent attention. That Berlin will be Europe's official "cultural capital" in 1988 further encouraged them to think in terms of a major project that could be on view for two years. On paper, at least, the plan seemed commendable: Eight internationally acknowledged sculptors, all resident in Berlin, would be commissioned to produce works for this urban mile. The prominent location, it was argued, would prompt "a fruitful dialogue between artist and public." Instead, and long before the projects were realized, the "Sculpture Boulevard" became the target of indignant protest.

Citizens' groups submitted petitions, bombarded newspapers with trate letters, and demanded a political accounting. The Senate had, after all, approved 1.8 million Deutsche marks (about $1 million) for the program. Anger ulumately would focus less on Metzel's filigree-like tower than on Wolf Vostell's Cadillacs encrusted in concrete. The Old Master of the Happening tilted one car against the next and entitled the composition "2 Concrete Cadillacs in the Form of the Naked Maja." The art-historical allusion escaped most motorists caught in the stop-and-go traffic on Rathenau Platz.

When the controversy peaked in early summer, protesters buried Vostell's Maja beneath floral bouquets and toilet brushes. The New Berlin Kunstverein, which had given the Sculpture Boulevard aesthetic and administrative guidance, collected the wilted tributes in garbage bags and dumped them before the house of the opposition leader. Art watchers fantasized over possible re-sponses to the single project not realized for Nonetheless, when the city's culture coordinators deliberated over the current 750th Kienholz had hoped to install two construction cranes, painted in the national colors of red-black-gold, which would perform a jousting match with gargantuan, air-filled rophylactics.

Whether Berliners would have accepted the aerial ode to a divided city is dubious. More likely, the celebrated local bumor would bave coined Safer Sex metaphors. Even without the condom conundrum, urban functionaries met the barrage with wavering tactics. Some argued that provocation, not communication, had been sought from the beginning. Others, including Mayor Eberbard Diepgen, denounced the entire roject. Appearing as celebrity guest on West Germany's most popular quiz show, be solemnly assured viewers that further "spectacles" of the sort would not be permitted during his term of office.

Overlooked in the squabbles was the sovereign authority of Vostell's provocative work that even harried commuters may come to acknowledge. (It is to remain as a permanent installation.) This is, to be sure, the last in a lengthy series of mummified automobiles that Vostell has dotted across the European continent. If self-quotation has limits, it can also radiate, as here, a persuasive air of conviction. Metzel's barricade-tower is also a work of genuine poetic power. Unhappily, its street-wise idiom is overwhelmed by the urban babble of the Few works, indeed, can compete with this polyglot environment. Conceptually, one of the best projects is Frank Dornseif's mammoth pedestal, on which earlier generations might have posed a triumphant bronze general. Here there is only a bare armature, casting its shadow as a metal silhouette set into the pavement. From such ironic shadow theater, Dornseif has evolved a highly personal style, but it requires intimacy to reveal

Similarly, the playful elegance of an aero-dynamic mobile by George Rickey, posi-tioned before the half-ruined Memorial Church, seems dissipated. Those who admire Rickey's achievements are better advised to visit the nearby Pels-Leusden Gallery, which is staging an impressive homage to the U.S.-born sculptor on the occasion of his 80th birthday. (Rickey's works are on view at 25 Fasanenstrasse through August.)

Among the few sculptures to establish their own space and identity on Ku'damm is "Berlin" — a four-part ensemble by Brighte and Martin Matschinsky-Denninghoff, Like twisted branches, the quartet of chromiumsteel forms reaches upward to seek connec-tion. As a symbol of a divided city who fate is indivisible, the composition has, not surprisingly, found a generally positive echo. On balance, however, the Sculpture Boulevard is the sort of project that gives public art a bad name.

Luckily, Münster's immensely successful show of public sculptures (and a more modest variation in Essen) helps redress the balance. For a total budget of 1.5 million marks (900,000 in official support, 600,000 in donations), more than 50 international artists realized works for sites of their own choosing. The result is a genuine dialogue between the artist and the urban environment. For 1.8 million marks, Berlin might have achieved considerably more than an interruption of a Kaffeeklatsch at the Cafe

To Amplify or Not To Amplify, That Is Theater's Question cesses shows that amplification and its aims

by Bernard Holland

EW YORK - Electrical amplification in the theater has infested Broadway, and some fear it is Broadway, and some tear it is stalking the opera house as well.

For the New York City Opera, it is a problem of communication. In the company's "straight" opera performances, there is not a microphone to be found, but the house's musical and operate productions have to all communication where the mouth have to put communication where the mouth is. There are no projected titles, no Italian or French to hide behind. The current run of Stephen Sondheim's "Sweeney Todd" serves Sondheim's 1979 Broadway success ventures halfway into the world of opera to begin with, and in a similar way, the City Opera finds itself balancing its big performing space (2,800 seats), its florid operatic voices and its full-blown pit orchestra against the subtleties of Sondheim's lyrics.

The house's response is again a compromise. Its orchestra is not amplified but everything on stage is. Seven microphones have been placed along the footlights with six more scattered and concealed around the stage. High in the balcony Robert Etter sits at n console and twiddles the dials that raise and lower the singers' ability to compete with the orchestra in front of and below them. Broadway orchestra pits usually are covered; the City Opera's is not. This production, moreover, has decided against the body mikes that are favored on Broadway. These tiny, radio-like devices attached to the performer, the City Opera leels, are compromised by rustling costumes and create aural confusion in duets. Beverly Sills, the house's general director, has insisted in the past that when speaking parts are finished and the music starts, the engineer will pull the volume way down."

The directional problem - tricking the listener into associating a voice from a loudspeaker with the performer's position on stage — is handled according to the Haas effect, says Etter, speaking of the physicist. who first exploited it.

There are two sources of sound in the theater here," he explained at a dress rehearsal. "One comes out of the performer's mouth, the other from the speakers. The brain tends to associate direction from the sound it hears first, so if you delay the amplified sound - say 18 milliseconds the ear directs the eye to what it heard first." The direction can be modified and gradated by changing the delay.

"It doesn't totally solve the problem," said Etter. "There is a point of diminishing returns, where too much delay turns into an echo, and this is a very wide theater."

A look at two of Broadway's current sucaren't necessarily the same for every show. At "Les Misérables," the Tony Awards winning musical, some would light that clarification is a bester term chan amphilication for this production's wared sound Loudspeakers bloat and scramble musical values no matter where they are used, but many people would point out that hes Mismany people would point out that "hes Min-icrables" is first of all a literate show in which words are everything, where diction the second-sitely projected and everything the second-oudary. Some would also suggest, and some might dispute — that Claude Michel Schonberg's score is created not to stand on-its over that have been formething. Schonberg's score is created not to sente the its own feet but to serve the stage (something it does admirably), and we are less worsed when it is distorted in the process. The music, in other words, always enhances be never dominates.

In "Startight Express," on the other hand amplification takes on an "artistic" missions all its own — to create a wall of sound for sound's sake that rushes out at the lister and knocks them flat. Niceties such as direction are held to a minimum in this hard-sell approach. For ears used to the concert hall, the amplification at the theater creates an almost traumatic effect. Therefore, it really doesn't matter if Andrew Lloyd Webbers music — as some critics have suggested — is vacuous or not. Here it seems simply the fuct. to fire up an aggressive sound system;

Paul Gemignani, the Broadway conducto who also is the musical head of City Open's "Sweeney Todd." is not happy about ample. fication anywhere.

"Natural sound is what it should be," he said "and I think people are wrong to blame the whole problem on Broadway performers. who don't know how to sing and project. If a the audiences, not the players, who have become lazy. People just aren't used to intening carefully anymore. They expect everything to be brought to them.

At the City Opera Gemignan has the added problem of adjusting the bulliance of Jonathan Tunick's orchestrations written with a closed pit in mind, to the open sur-roundings at the New York State Header. He particularly dislikes amplified orchestra: on Broadway, which he says, deny him mustcal mances. Sondheim's new show-in-progress, "Into the Woods," Gemignant reports will "start with natural sound" and take that concept as far as possible.

Sondheim, who showed up for last Tues day's rehearsals, took a free moment to re member his youth of balcony-perching with Hal Prince, now the director, in Broadway's pre-electronic era. "Hal likes to remind me of the way we had to lean way forward in-order to understand the words," Sondieum said. "We had to work to listen. You don't anymore, and this is amplification's worst

Foreign Filmmakers Turn to American Performers

by Annette Insdorf

LTHOUGH there is nothing new about American actors starring in foreign directors' films — from Marior. Brando in Bernardo Bertolucci's "Last Tango in Faris" to William Hurt in Hector Babenco's "Kiss of the Spider Woman" — the phenomenon is assuming ever-larger proportions. For economic as well as artistic reasons, directors from abroad making English-language movies want to work with American performers; similarly, actors from the United States are attracted to the challenging projects that Hollywood doesn't seem to be offering. Perhaps Hurt's Academy Award (and Cannes Film Festival prize) for best actor sent an important signal to his colleagues, namely that a South American director could shape brillians characterization as skillfully as an American.

"Good Morning Babylonia" and "Un homme amoureux" ("A Man in Love") are two examples of this growing internationalization. Both are English-language films shot in Europe by acclaimed foreign directors—the Taviani brothers ("Padre, Padrone") and Diane Knyw ("Entre Nove")—and majnly Diane Knrys ("Entre Nous") - and mainly starring American actors.

The trend continues with "Deadline," directed by the Israeli Nathaniel Gutman and starring Christopher Walken as a cynical American reporter confronted by war-torn Beirut. And John Shea — whose credits include Costa-Gavras's "Missing" — costars with Kelly McGillis in another upcoming English-language Israeli film, "Dream-

Both "Good Morning, Babylonia" and "Un homme amoureux" met with mixed critical response when they premiered at the Cannes Film Festival, but the acting was lauded across the board. European audiences discovered Peter Coyote and Peter Riegert in Diane Kurys's first English-language film and Joaquim de Almeida and Vincent Spano in Paolo and Vittorio Taviani's first non-Italian effort. (Greta Scacchi, incidentally, appears in both.)

The Taviani brothers chronicle the experiences of two Italian brothers who come to the United States and work for D.W. Griffith, designing the Babylon sets for his epic film "Intolerance." In "Un homme amoureux," also set in the world of filmmaking, a famous — and married — American actor (Peter Coyote) falls in love with a bit player (Scacchi) while making a movie about the Italian writer Cesare Pavese. Kurys follows multiple relationships that include the actor's to his buddy (Peter Riegert), and the actress's to her dying mother (Claudia Car-

The four United States-based actors offered a wide range of observations on the reasons for this internationalization, as well as on the differences between making films abroad and at bome. andre Arcady and the npcoming "Stranger" for the Argentine Adolfo Aristarain — said that "with foreign directors, there's more playfulness, or play, with the making of the movie. While there's still a lot of pressure to do well, the economic pressure is not as

"The stories are different," added the New York-based actor, "much less in search of the widest demographics. And they are cast according to the particular story rather than for publicity purposes. Diane — much like Bill and Adolfo — is very open to pushing what's at stake in a scene. They're not limited by the text - they're inspired by it. They have an innate understanding of how things

Riegert, who is currently starring on Broadway in "The Nerd," stressed the "more human scale" of foreign films.

"It's an economic phenomenon," the 40-year-old actor continued, "paralleled by the independent film movement in the States. There are enough people wanting to do things — whether writers, directors or actors - and there's not enough work in mainstream Hollywood. Just by necessity, the bounds will be pushed aside by the various needs of creative people."

But where European filmmakers once dubbed Americans into foreign languages, now they leave their dialogue in English.

"That's market-related," said Riegert. whose other credits include "Animal House" and "Concealed Enemies," in which he played Riehard Nixon, "As the prices go up to make movies abroad, the American market is too huge to be ignored. 'A Man in Love' is not going to have much opportunity to make money only in France, especially now that France's moviegoing public has shrunk because of TV,"

Diane Kurys maintained that the reason she made the film in English is that the central character "is American — as a real movie star has to be." Casting him was not easy until she saw "Heartbreakers," in which Coyote played what the title implies, "I had already seen 'The Jagged Edge' and 'Stranger's Kiss,' but never thought of using him in the lead," she said. "After 'Hearthreakers,' I said, 'perfect': Coyote has a lot of charm, intelligence, tenderness and vulnerability. As far as Riegert is concerned, I wrote the part of Michael directly for him, and he was the first one cast."

The first actor cast in "Good Morning, Babylonia" was Joaquim de Almeida, who came here from his native Portugal 11 years ago. He appeared in "Beyond the Limit" with Richard Gere, and his strong screen presence was not forgotten by Jose Villa-verde, the California casting director for the Taviani hrothers' drama.

When asked to compare working with European and American directors, the 30-year-old actor replied, "There is a difference —especially with the Tavianis because they are two; hut it's like they're one! They alternate directing shots, and you talk only with the director who is shooting. It becomes like what we tried to do with the characters in the film, which is one coin with two faces: one completes the other."

Whereas Riegert's experience suggested a greater freedom with foreign directors, de Almeida's situation differed: "The Tavianis seem to be very mathematical," be observed. "In a way, they already have the film edited before they make it. They know exactly where 10 put the camera, because they know which shot they will use. Americans discuss the scene before directing; the Tavianis want very specific scenes, and it's inside the spe-cifics that we have to find our own freedom."

Vincent Spano echoed these sentiments when reached by phone in Italy, where he is making another English-language Italian film. They want total control over what's happening in their frame," said the 24-year-old actor, whose credits include John Sayles's "Baby, It's You" and Andrei Konehalovsky's "Maria's Lovers." "As much as that could be frustrating, I learned a great lesson from them in detail. They know exactly what they want. It's like falling hack with your eyes closed, and you know they'll catch

De Almeida — who speaks fluent Italian, in addition to French, Spanish, German and Portuguese — added that "Americans talk more in terms of objectives, and the Tavianis talk more about emotions. One particularly good thing was that they were so secure and sure of where to put the camera that they had time to take care of the actors. We were able to discuss things during rehearsals."

This is one of the key points that Kurys stressed, as she observed that American actors are "more available before and during shooting. In France, we don't rehearse: producers don't let you, because there's not enough time and you can't bring the actors earlier.

"American actors have a sense of their art that is sharper than ours," she continued. "There's a constant inventiveness: they suggest more things, and really take the acting seriously. For example, Riegert chose all his costumes: he hrought them in a suitcase, one for every day!" The contributions of the American actors were especially important to her, because 'Une homme amoureux" depends on character nuance more than linear plot development. As Coyote perceived, "The structure is derived from the intentions of the characters, whereas most American films have the intentions of the character subjugated to the

During a telephone interview from Toronto, where he is shooting a mini-series, he added that "the primary difference is Europe's vibrant intellectual tradition: ideas have real currency there. I think that the reason I usually play villains in America and played a hero in France aptly reflects the differing attitudes of the two continents toward intellectual thought."

American actors do not have the same freedom that Riegert perceives among Euro-pean performers: "They go from lead to supporting role, to cameo," he remarked. "We have a class system: if you do a few leads and then take a supporting part, people ask, "What happened?" My ambition, or fantasy, is to make a movie in every country. My idols are the silent actors like Chaplin and Keaton who, because of silence, crossed all boundaries.*

Nadio Boulanger, whose 100th anniversary was observed this year.

Bernstein-Boulanger Continued from poge 7

thing," as she is quoted by Bruno Monsain-geon in his "Mademoiselle." and her fame in the United States was the main attraction for students.

Jean-Pierre Marty shrugs belplessly when asked what it is like to be in the seat once occupied by Nadia Boulanger. At 55, he is an all-around musician: conductor and pianist, author of a scholarly tome, "Tempo Indications of Mozart," due from Yale University Press next year, and former director of opera at Radio France. At 12 he was a piano pupil of Alfred Cortot, and much later of Julius Katchen. He spent a dozen years of his career in the United States — where he began conducting with the New York City Ballet and American Ballet Theater - which gives him a usefully bicultural attitude to his new job. He, too, studied with Nadia Boulanger. She was unique and by definition irreplaceable, his shrug seems 10 say. The world has changed, but the school remains.

"The basic problem is the orientation of the school; it has to justify its existence," he said. "In some ways, the fact that Nadia Boulanger taught and ran the conservatoire for so long was perhaps not good for the school as an entity.

"The Conservatoire Americain was founded to fill a gap when American music education was in an embryonic state. Bul that changed. Now many French want to go to American schools." That sea change in the world of music education dates mainly from the end of the Second World War and it is what the school now must face. Marry believes. Indeed, there has been a 30-year delay, in large part because Nadia Boulanger was who she was,

"She was one of those people --- Bernstein is another - who have ideas and the force of character to carry them out. Their acts are meaningful because they did them. The point is not to try and imitate Nadia Boulanger and the way she ran the school, but to concentrate on what the school has to offer, on what there is here that cannot be found

One thing the school has is its setting, the palace of Fontainebleau in lovely countryside 65 kilometers (40 miles) south of Paris. where the school has its classes for two months each summer. After the grand Mademoiselle died in 1979, the authorities did what they had been wanting to do for years move the conservatoire from the Louis XV wing, so it could be renovated, to the part of the palace known as the Quartier Henri VI. The offices and practice studios there are spartan, but spacious.

The concerts that are given for school and town during the term are still being held in the palace's Jeu de Paume, which has an organ and a stage big enough for a small orchestra. But the Jeu de Paume is marked for restoration, too, and Marty is now jousting with the Culture Ministry to try and stymic this, or at least get a good replacement. The French foundation that operates the Ecoles d'Art Américaines also owns its own faculty and student restaurant and two student hotels in the town. But more important, Marty feels, is that the school still has much to offer Americans in what is unique about a French musical

"There is no point in trying to compete with the hundreds of American schools and summer courses. There is solfège, the thorough French way of studying theory and analysis; there are the different French schools of instrumental playing; there is the French song and lyric repertory, touch of it unknown in the United States. It should be a meeting point of different disciplines, with both a performance channel and a theorencal one. There shouldn't be prizes or awards, and I'm not sure whether it should be part of the American credit system - it could lose some of its flavor."

Marty knows he has a lot of work to do. The student body of about 65 for the two sessions this summer is well below that of the Boulanger heyday. He hopes to attract some non-government subsidies to augment the tuition money ($2,500 for all eight weeks this year), and to initiate a more systematic student recruitment and scholarship program. The trick is to attract strong faculty with good students, and vice versa.

Marty admits that not all of his plans this year worked as well as the conducting seminar, which he taught and Bernstein took over for four days. But Bernstein's presence attracted advanced students, made it possible to attract a 46-piece resident orchestra for little more than two weeks of room and board, and set up the Salle Pleyel concert. Bernstein's return is hoped for next year.

"I told the Culture Ministry," Marty said. "that it was only through this course that a graduate of the Conservatoire de Paris got to conduct the Orchestre de Paris."

Investment Help Wanted? 'Temp' Firms Are Booming

By VARTANIG G. VARTAN

New York Times Service

EW YORK - Most analysts continue to give high marks to the temporary-help business—a niche industry that sprang into the Wall Street spotlight this week when Blue Arrow PLC, the leading employment agency in Britain, made a surprise takeover bid for Manpower Inc.,

the largest "temp" provider in the world.

Blue Arrow offered $75 a share for the much-larger American company. The market's immediate response was to send Manpower's slock shooting ahead $15.625, to $78, on Tuesday, and up another 50 cents, to $78.50, on Wednesday.

While the outcome of the bid remains uncertain, shares of other leading temporary-help "Temp" firms have companies — Kelly Services, Olsten Corp. and Adia Services — also have reached highs. However, Jerry Levine of Merrill Lynch said these companies are not regarded as acquisition targets because their control rests securely in The hands of founding families or, in the case of Adia, of a benefited from the vast restructuring in U.S. industry since the early 1980s.

Switzerland-based personnel services company.

Instead, analysts said these stocks are attractive because of their record of steady profit growth even in the face of a ho-hum U.S. economy. For example, earnings at Kelly Services, the largest supplier of temporary personnel in the United States, tripled from 73 cents a sbare in 1982 to $2.27 a share in 1986. In one sense, temporary-belp companies are a beneficiary of the vast restructuring that has occurred in American industry since the early 1980s, said Judith Scott of Robert W. Baird & Co.

in Milwaukee. 'As companies concentrated on reducing fixed costs, they realized the advantages and flexibility of using temporary workers in clerical, marketing, industrial and other capacities," she said. "And as demand for new skills increased in such areas as computer programming and data processing, the service companies moved quickly to fill the need at the same time their own training procedures grew more sophisticated."

NE ADVANTAGE, too, of hiring temporary help is that employers avoid paying for benefits. They are shouldered instead by the employment-service companies.

instead by the employment-service companies.

Mr. Levine of Merrill Lynch has made "bny" recommendations for toth Kelly and Olsten. "I estimate earnings of Kelly Services at $2.85 a share this year and, for 1988, profits could show a further gain of 22 to 25 percent," he said.

Olsten earned 75 cents a share in 1986, after adjustment for a recent 3-for-2 stock split. Mr. Levine projects per-share profits of from 97 cents to $1 for this year, with earnings climbing another 25 to 30 percent in 1988.

25 to 30 percent in 1988.

Ms. Scott also continues to regard Kelly and Olsten as "buys." She foresees per-share profit at Kelly of $2.85 this year and $3.35 in 1988, and at Olsten of $1 in 1987 and $1.20 next year.

Fran Blechman Bernstein, the Merrill Lynch analyst who follows buy-rated Adia Services, estimates per-share profit at $1.05 to $1.15 this year and $1.30 to $1.40 in 1988. Last year, the company earned 76 cents a share.

In American Stock Exchange trading on Wednesday, Olsten rose 50 cents, to $27.25. The shares have doubled within the last 52 weeks. In over-the-counter trading, Kelly Services gained 75 cents, to $64.25. Its sbares have quadrupled in price since mid-1984. Adia Services rose 12.5 cents, to $28.625.

Another small but fast-growing company in the field is Uni-force Temporary Personnel. Its shares fell 50 cents on Wednesday, to $12.75, after selling for as low as $4 within the past year.

Despite the bright future, growth of temporary-help companies could slow abruptly should a severe economic recession come to pass. The last recession, for example, pared the profits of Kelly Services from $1.10 a share in 1981 to 73 cents the following year. In the similar period, Olsten's earnings dropped from 43 cents a share to 31 cents.

'88 Projection Revised to 3.5%

WASHINGTON -- The Reagan administration on Thursday revised downwards its forecast for 1988 U.S. economic growth, but left unchanged its projection for 3.2 percent growth in gross national product this year.

The 1987 growth forecast is close to that projected by many private economists. GNP measures the total output of a nation's goods and

The administration said the economy would continue to ex-pand through 1992, with 3.5 percent growth next year that would taper off to 3.1 percent by 1990. In January, the administration pro-jected that GNP would grow 3.7

The administration said that inflation, as measured by the Consumer Price Index, would rise 4.8 percent this year — a full percent-age point higher than the January rojection.

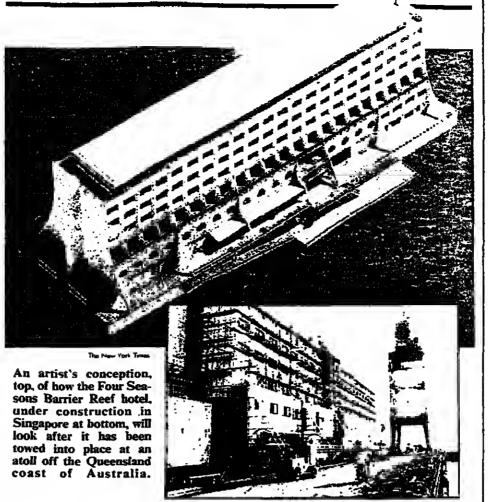

Still, the prediction is below the 5.4 percent annual rate at which the Consumer Price Index increased for the first six months of the year, Beryl W. Sprinkel, chairman of the President's Council of Economic Advisers, said that the higher rate was not expected to persist. That rate has been attributed largely to rebounding oil prices and a weakening dollar, which has made imports more expensive.

The administration also raised its projection on interest rates. It said three-month Treasury bills would average 5.7 percent, compared with 5.4 percent projected in the president's budget in January, while 10-year Treasury securities would average 8 percent, rather than 6.7 percent as earlier forecast.

■ West German GNP

West Germany's inflation-adjusted gross national product grew 1 to 1.5 percent in the second quarter after a weak first quarter, the Associated Press reported from Bonn on Thursday, quoting the Economics Ministry.

In Asia, a Hotel Prepares to Set Sail

By Barbara Crosserte

New York Times Service
SINGAPORE — The world's first floating luxury hotel - a 200-room building with disco. swimming pool, tennis courts, conference rooms, a marina and two restaurants — is nearing comple-tion here at a Bethlehem Steel shipyard. Construction of the seven-story building, atop a 20-font-deep (6.1-meter) "basement" barge containing generators, trash incinerators, cold stores, wine cellar and a desalinization plant for drinking water, is only pan of an unusual enterprise story.

When finished, probably in September or early October, the hotel will bave to be floated and towed by a special ship 2,200 miles 13,560 kilometers) to its mooring, 40 miles off the coast of Australia. There, it will be anchored in an atoll of the Great Barrier Reef, a scuba-diving and gamefishing paradise.

"That part is the hotel owner's problem," M. H. Leubecker, president and general manager of Bethlehem Singapore, said with a smile as be discussed the project in his office at the shipyard.

For Bethlebern Singapore — 70 percent controlled by Bethlebern Steel Corp. and 30 percent owned by the government's Development Bank of Singapore — the construction of the floating resort complex, called the Four Seasons Barrier Reef hotel, grows out of the shipvard's main work; building oil rigs and floating dry docks. Bethlehem Singapore, founded in 1969, has built 25 rigs of its own design.

Mr. Leubecker said the $21 million botel contract came along at a time when the oil industry had slowed and the offshore rig business was in a slump. For Singapore, a small country looking for new ways to employ a well-educated work force, every "first" is important.

The project has not been without its problems, however, Mr. Leubecker said.

The hotel's owners, Great Barrier Holdings of Australia, had entered into a contract for the design and construction of the hotel with an Asian subsidiary of Consafe AB of Sweden, known for its construction of modular offshore accommodation units. But Consafe collapsed in 1985.

When Bethlebem Singapore began to construct the hotel less than a year ago, it had to work with See HOTEL Page 17

U.K. Inquiry Halts Merger of BA, Caledonian

Compiled in that Staff From Disputing LONDON - The British government ordered an investigation Thursday into the proposed merger of British Airways PLC and British Caledonian Group PLC, halting the £237 million ($372 million)

British Airways said that its offer to acquire unprofitable BCal lapsed after the trade and industry secretary, Lord Young, referred the plan to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission.

But BA said that it would revive the bid if the commission's report cleared the proposed merger. Inquiries into anti-competitive impli-cations of takeovers and mergers ordinarily take around six months. but the Department of Trade and Industry supulated that in this case, the review should last no more than three months.

British Caledonian's chairman. Sir Adam Thomson, had said his airline would withdraw from the agreement, announced July 16. if the government referred the plan to the mergers commission.

But on Thursday. Sir Adam appeared to retreat from that position, saying in an interview; "If the referral were to have been for six months, that would have given us a problem, but we might be able to accept a three-month study.

He said British Caledonian would hold a board meeting on Saturday to decide whether to continue the talks with BA.

The BCal chairman said that if six months had passed with the airline's status in limbo, doubts would have been raised in travel agents' minds about booking passengers on its flights, But he added.
"We can stand solid on our bookings over the next three months."

Sir Adam has said that BCal had held talks with other airlines, and that the carrier was prepared to resume them if the merger with BA was blocked.

Sources close to the company said Thursday that talks had been sion. Lord Young had taken the held with Alitalia, KLM Royal risk of putting a question mark Dutch Airlines, Air France, Deutsche Lufthansa AG. American Airlines. Continental Airlines and Northwest Airlines, The merger agreement was aimed at helping British Caledonium, which reported a £19.3 million pretax loss in the year ended last Oct. 31. It was also meant to create what the two airlines called a "mega-carner" capable of taking on the big U.S. airlines.

British Airways, sold to private investors by Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's Conservative gov-ernment for £900 million earlier this year, said Wednesday that it earned £90 million before taxes in the first quarter of its 1987-88 financial year. The profit was almost triple the amount for the April-June period last year.

Lord King chairman of BA, said Thursday that the airline intended to make an offer for the entire share capital of British Caledonian group after the MMC's report," A resolution to that effect would be put to a special shareholders' meeting next week, he added. Shares of British Airways were quoted at 142 pence on the London Stock Exchange after the announcement. 2 pence higher than Wednesday's close.

Lord Young decided to refer the merger to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission after studying a report from Sir Gordon Borne, head of the government's Office of Fair Trading. Political sources said that Sir Gordon had recommended a referral.

Critics of the proposed merger argued that it would make a mockery of the government's stated po-lies of encouraging competition in the aviation industry if it were allowed to proceed unchallenged.

Smaller airlines said the creation of a big carrier would force them to operate further away from London, and stifle competition. British Airways is based at London's Heathrow Airpon and British Caledonian at Gatwick, south of the city.

Political sources said that by referring the merger to the commis-sion. Lord Young had taken the and thwarting the ambitions of British Airways, one of the current darlings of British industry.

Remers

TOKYO — The Bank of Japan is increasingly worried that Japan's inflation rate may begin to rise and stands ready to take pre-emptive action if oceded in the coming months, central action if ceeded in the coming months, central bank officials said Thursday.

While reiterating that the bank plans to maiotain its easy credit policy for oow, they expressed concern that rapidly accelerating economic growth and loose fiscal policy might spur inflationary expectations later this fiscal year.

"If the government continues pouring out money, we will have to do somethiog," one official said.

official said.

Finance Ministry officials said that they believed the bank's fears of inflation were misplaced. They prefer to avoid any action, such as moving interest rates higher, that could lead to U.S. charges that Japan is not stimulating domestic demand.

Interest and of inflation which is the official said.

mesus demand.

Japan's rate of inflation, which is low in comparison to other industrialized countries, has been running at less than 1 perceot. The rise in the yen against other currencies has made imports, which include oil and other raw materials, much cheaper and has help down prices.

The Bank of Japan, however, seems convinced the economy is on the upswiog. Bank officials said they expect the economy to grow at an annual rate of a 5 to 512 percent to the second half of the current fiscal year ending next March. That would be at or close to the rate some officials think is the most the economy can grow without igniting inflation. For the fiscal year as a whole, the bank expects real economic growth of 3 to 4 percent, in line with the government's 3.5 percent forecast, and well above 1986-87's Via The Associated Press

"SKF's Pretax Earnings Rose 15.5% in First Half

By Juris Kaza Special to the Herald Tribune

STOCKHOLM - SKF AB, the Swedish maker of tools and ballbearings, said Thursday that its first-half pretax earnings rose a better-than-expected 15.5 percent from a year earlier, to 821 million kronor, or about $125.4 million.

Adjusted for the divestment of SKF's steel operations last year, sales were up 9 percent, to 9.9 biltion kronor, from 9.1 billion kronor

British Companies Rapidly Widen Their U.S. Beachhead

By Warren Gerler

LONDON - If Paul Revere were alive these days, he'd be hard pressed to cope with the latest British assault on America: In the last five days alone, U.K. raiders have launched takeover bids totaling $3.7 billion for U.S. companies, nearly as much as the $5 billion spent for all of 1985.

The bids include a $1.24 billion bid by Blue Arrow PLC for Manpower Inc., the world's largest part-time help agency; a $1.6 billion bid by Hanson Trust PLC for Kidde Inc., maker of Jacuzzi whirlpool baths; and an $820 million offer for First Jersey National Corp., New Jersey's fourth-largest bank, by the U.S. arm of National Westminster Bank PLC. Indeed, so far this year, British companies have offered more than $18 billion for U.S. companies, compared with $13 billion for all of last year, according to Bob Cow-ell, head of U.K. equity research at the London brokerage Hoare Govett Ltd. Most of this year's bids have proved successful or are still outstanding, with the earlier this year, with British Petroleum notable exception of Robert Maxwell's PLC's $7.6 billion acquisition of the stake aborted S2 billion hosule offer for Harcourt Brace Jovanovich Inc.

To be sure, British companies have been pounding the U.S. acquisition trail for decades. British firms, in part due to language, legal and accounting similarities. have long topped the list of overseas investors in the United States, holding $51.4 billion in direct investments at the end of 1986 against $23.4 billion for the Japanese.

But British companies have had to run a gauntlet of takeover defenses, often in the form of U.S. litigation from shareholders and directors. Moreover, not all U.K.launched takeovers have been a resounding financial success. The most recent case in point was Midland Bank PLC's divestiture last year of its California-based subsidiars. Crocker National Corp., the struggling retail bank it had acquired in 1981. Still, over the past two years the pace of acquisitive British firms has become furious and the prey ever larger. The biggest transAtlantic purchase came in its Standard Oil Co. subsidiary that it did not already own. Before that, Unilever PLC's $3.1 billion acquisition of Chesebrough-Pond's Inc. late last year had been the biggest.

Many British manufacturers, forced to streamline operations to survive a severe shakeout in 1980-81, have come to enjoy a steady stream of profits and have amassed large cash hourds.

That eash flow, bolstered by large credit facilities extended by London's mushrooming (inancial sector, is being funncled into the United States, where markets are bigger and more easily penetrated. U.S. investment banks, which have upgraded their presence in London following last year's market deregulation, are increasingly influential in determining where such cash flow will be funneled in the United States.

As a recent editorial in The Independent, the British daily, suggested: "The message reiterated by the top management at companies like ICI PLC, GEC PLC, and Hanson Trust PLC is that the United States remains the largest, most fluid and most accessible of world markets. The relative paucity of intra-European deals underlines how far we have to go before we create a genuine European market."

A second major factor behind the new British wave has been the U.S. dollar's sharp depreciation in 1985-86

Now that the pound appears a bit shaky against the dollar, companies may seek to snatch up U.S. assets while they remain thean. As the dollar strengthens, the larger will be the profit contribution from the U.S. subsidiary when those earnings are repatriated into pounds, the thinking goes.

A third prod to the British buying spree in the United States has been London's long-running bull market. A steady surge in share prices on the London Stock Exchange over the past three years has enabled numerous companies, including small to mid-size firms, to raise large amounts of fresh capital as fodder for a takeover bid - often for U.S. companies

GM Reverses Policy, Renews Incentives to Cut Inventories

By John Holusha

New York Times Service DETROIT - General Motors Corp., which had vowed to resist any more major salesincentive campaigns, bas announced its biggest incentives yet to cut inventories, with interest rates on car loans as low as 1.9 percent and rebates of up to $1,000.

GM said Wednesday that it was offering the incentives, which apply to most models through Sept. 30, to move nearly 1 million 1987 cars off for an increase to 1.6 billion kronor dealers' lots and to prepare for 1988 models.

Ideas bring growth to finance.

The birth of Ferruzzi Agricola Finanziaria.

In October 1985 Gruppo Ferruzzi set out its plans to create one of the biggest agro-industrial groups in the world, to extend its activities into new sectors and to expand into new continents. In less than two years Gruppo Ferruzzi has become the largest agro-industrial group in Europe and the third largest in the world. Furthermore it is the second private-sector industrial conglomerate in Italy with an aggregate turnover of over 18 billion dollars. The Group's idea to use agricultural products for industrial and energy uses, and its related programme for environmental protection is a focal point of international debate. The driving force behind this extraordinary expansion has been Agricola Finanziaria, the Group's holding company. Its success on the financial market has allowed it to make large-scale investments such as the acquisition of CPC Europe, leader in the starch sector, the acquisition of a controlling interest in Montedison and Béghin-Say, and the restructuring of the sugar sector which makes the Group Europe's leading sugar producer. The market capitalization of the Agricola Finanziaria group amounts to about 20 billion dollars.

And now it is time for it to grow even more. Agricola Finanziaria is increasingly identified with Gruppo Ferruzzi and so Ferruzzi Agricola Finanziaria has been born.

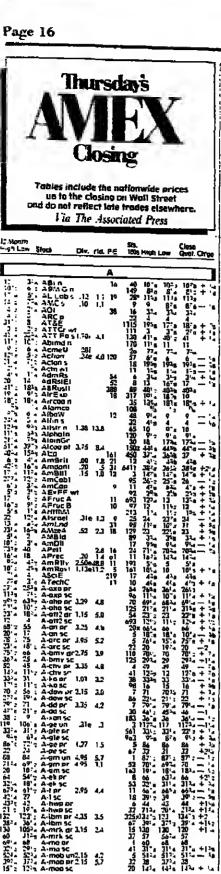

All the activities of the Group will converge in the new holding company so that in due course Ferruzzi Agricola Finanziaria and Gruppo Ferruzzi will form a single entity. Its theatre of operations is increasingly worldwide.

Ferruzzi Agricola Finanziaria will span five continents.

Its widely diversified activities follow a single vertical structure from agriculture to services, from trading to agro-industry, from chemicals to the advanced services sector and finally to numerous industrial and financial shareholdings. Ferruzzi Agricola Finanziaria will be quoted on all the main European Stock Exchanges including London and Paris. This will lead to a broad national and international shareholder base in line with the Group's importance. The cycle is in constant movement: two years ago ideas brought growth to finance. Today

Finance is bringing growth to ideas.

Fed, Bundesbank Slow Dollar's Rise

NEW YORK - Concerted inrevention by the central banks of the United States and West Germany pushed the dollar off its highs Thursday in New York and Enrope, dealers said, but the U.S. currency nonetheless closed above Wednesday's levels against most

The dollar's resilience, dealers said, resulted from continued concern about possible expansion of the Iran-Iraq war, although no fresh news emerged Thursday. The dollar, which is considered a "safe haven" investment, also attracted buying from investors who chart historical currency movements.

"It just won't lie down," said a had prompted the intervention. like there's a lot of steam in it yet." Daniel Holland, assistant vice president at Discount Corp. in New York, agreed. "The intervention doesn't seem to have been too specessful," he said.

The Bundeshank action began when the dollar was trading at about 1.8805 Deutsche marks in early afternoon, dealers said. The feet intervened at about 1.8840 km, just below the 1.8850 DM level at which the Bundeshank had sold dollars on Wednesday.

M-1 Rose $1 Billion in Week

NEW YORK - M-I, the basic measure of U.S. money supply, rose $1 billion to a seasonally adjusted $749.1 billion in the week and inflation are apt to be worse ended July 27, the Federal Reserve than expected." said Thursday. The previous week's M-1 level was revised to $748.1 billion from $748.3 hillion. M-1 includes cash in circulation, checking £561 million ($585 million) in Britdeposits and travelers checks.

Dealers said Thursday's coordinated intervention, of about $100 million to $150 million for each central bank, appeared to have been a smoothing action rather against the U.S. currency 10 than an attempt to reverse the dollar's upward trend.

The intervention initially pushed

Although the dollar eased to 1.5445 Swiss francs in New York from 1.5590 on Wednesday, it rose to 151.50 yen from 150.85 and to 6.2795 French francs from 6.2616. The British pound slipped to $1.5765 from $1.5780.

In London, the dollar rose to 1.8825 DM, above the finish of 1.8785 DM on Wednesday; to 151.40 yen, from 150.75; to 1.5629 Swiss francs, after 1.5580 and to 6.2745 French francs from 6.2575. The British pound also fell

In earlier European trading, the It was the speed of the dollar's dollar was fixed higher in Frankclimb this week, they said, rather furt at 1.8842 DM, up from 1.8789 than the actual levels reached that DM on Wednesday. The currency was fixed in Paris at 6,2725 French francs, after 6.2600.

Sprinkel Smiles On Fed Policy

WASHINGTON - Beryl W. Sprinkel, chairman of the President's Council of Economic Advisers, said Thursday that he was satisfied with the Federal Reserve Board's conduct of monetary policy.

Mr. Sprinkel told reporters that "no one knows for sure" whether the Fed is supplying enough money to satisfy the economy. But he said he saw "no evidence" that the Fed was choking off growth by an overly tight policy. In recent congresstonal testimony, he had warned that if the Fed continued to tighten credit, as it did in May, growth could be harmed. Mr. Sprinkel also said he was satisfied with the Fed's 1988 money supply growth targets. The targets are 5 to 8 percent for M-2 and M-3. The Fed set no target for M-1.

NEW YORK INTELLECT: A History of Intellectual Life in New York, From 1750 to The Beginnings of Our Own Time. By Thouses Bender. Alfred A. Knopf, 201 East 50th Street, New York, N. Y. 10022.

Maybe it is true, as Thomas Bender suggests that there is a bit of New York in all of us, though some will nod their assent sadly. The city goes with the 20th century in a way that few other places do. The influence, for good or ill, of its media concentrations, its art and architecture, its music and theater, its scholarship, its bristling museums and busy galleries, but most importantly its quarreling literary coteries — all have combined to make it the unofficial capital of American culture and headquarters of revolutions aplenty.

For believers, New York is not merely urban it is metropolitan, the mold maker, the special home of a temperament at once sophisticated, democratic and liberal in the old-fashioned, generous sense. Thomas Bender, chair-man of the Department of History at New York University, is a believer, though not an uncritical one. Reasoning that "we cannot understand ourselves as intellectuals, as Americans, until we grasp the special character of New York — its limitations and possibilities as a place of intellect," he sets out to recover the traditions of the life of the mind that have taken root in the city and to organize our perceptions of them. The result is an important book, not simply as a history of Manhattan worthies and their combats, but as a new kind of urban history, more edifying than the usual accounts of business and politics, money and migrations, that would search out the local mainsprings of cultural life.

(Michael J. Lacey, WP) THE ELIZABETH STORIES. By Isabel Hog-

gan. Viking Inc., 40 West 23d Street, New York, N. Y. 10010. If, as Flannery O'Connor once wrote, the best short stories resist paraphrase, then Isabel Huggan's "The Elizabeth Stories" clearly qual-ify. All eight of these vibrant, provocative stories undulate with ambiguity. Sprawling beyond their margins, they exalt mystery over explanation. Expect to be haunted by these stories not for what they solve but for what

"Sorrows of the Flesh" is a modern masterpiece, as fine a story of sexual awakening and delusion as I've ever read. But almost every story in the collection is as shapely and come plex. These are stories about human desire and piez. These are stories about numan used and fallibility, the excruciating impotence of childhood, the glib tyranny of parents that embiters the hearts of children. Set in the late '50s term of the company of the com and early '60s, the stones portray the formative years of Elizabeth Kessler, a small-town Canadien girl, the only child of unyielding parents who mostly regard her with distrust and dis-

Enduring the ambiguities of youth is one of the greatest achievements of growing up. In these stories Elizabeth evolves from an awkward, self-conscious child, eager to plunder life's secrets, to a witty, resilient young woman, enlightened by her struggles. A survivor despair, she seems almost to have outgrown it. If she still has more questions than answers, she remains undefeated by them. (Marianne Gingher, WP)

LAST LETTERS: Prisons and Prisoners of the French Revolution 1793-1794. By Olivier Blanc. Translated by Alan Sheridan. Michael di

Capus Books/Farrar, Strass & Groux, 19
Union Square West, New York, N. Y. 10063.

Antoine-Quentin Fouquier-Tinville was public prosecutor of the Revolutionary Tribunal in Paris Aurimidate. nal in Paris during the Terror, from March 1793 to July 1794. Some years ago, while going through the Foundier Tinville files in the French meional archives, the historian Olivier Blanc came across a large number of letters and farewell notes from prisoners sentenced to death by the Tribunal: They had been intercepted, and prevented from reaching the families and friends for whom they were intended.

Blane's election from this corresponded.

forms the basis of his remarkable book "Last Letters." Of the 150 letters he reprints, 113 have never before been published; of the remainder, a few — notably those written by Marie Antoinette and Madame Roland — are well known, but most of the others, though they found their way into print shortly after the Revolution, have subsequently been forgotten or ignored.

At the same time, "Last Letters" is much more than an anthology. The first half consists of a narrative (with many letters embedded in it) in which Blanc examines the background of the prisoners and the conditions under which they were detained and, in most cases, execut-

An abundance of passion shows through the rather formal phrasing employed by most of the correspondents, while their personalities and personal histories (carefully annotated by Manc) are varied enough to insure against any danger of monotony. The famous chemist Lavoisier; a pioneering feminist. Olympe de Gouges; a Polish princess; a petty forger; the mayor of Strashourg, who apologizes to his son because all he can leave him are a few pieces of music he has composed or arranged while in prison — these are some of the victims whose fates we can see being sealed. And bringing to the rear there is Fouquier-Tinville himself, who was removed from office after the fall of Robespierre and guillotined, protesting his probity, in 1795. The result is both moving and

Scuff, Grease or Shampoo? A Pro Tells How to Do It

New York Times Service

NEW YORK -One major-'eague pitcher who admits privately to doing funny things with baseballs says each pitching staff has at least one pitcher who scuffs, cuts or moistens some of the balls he throws. The pitcher, for obvious reasons, declined to be identified and also declined to name any pitchers who throw funny pitches. He did, however, provide almost step-by-step details on what pitchers do to balls and where they keep the tools of their controversial trade. The pitchers in question, he explained, basically do one of two things: They scuff or cut the ball with tools like sandpaper or glove cyclets, or they apply a slippery substance to the ball, such as K-Y jelly, Vaseline or shampoo.

"With the sandpaper," he related, "you cut pieces about one inch by one inch and glue a piece on the inside of your glove hand. That way when you rub up the ball, you can scuff it with the sandpaper. You can change it every inning if you want or you can leave it on for three or four innings. You always leave one tip unglued so if the umpire comes out, you can flip it onto the ground or in your back pocket or in your uniform."

Using sandpaper is not the only way to scuff a ball, he said. A pitcher can bend back the eyelets on his glove and use the protruding metal, or the catcher can scuff the ball in the dirt.

"The catcher can scrape it in the dirt after the last pitch of his warmups, then throw it to second base. The umpire isn't looking and it's easy to do." "You can scuff the ball anywhere you want," the pitcher explained

You don't have to have a great big cut to make it do something. What you do when you throw it is you turn the scuffed part the opposite way of the way you want the bail to go."

Now for the greaseball or spitball, as moistened pitches always have been known. A variety of substances can be used, the pitcher said. He mentioned Vaseline, K-Y jelly ("but the wind affects it because it dries quickly"), chewing-tobacco juice and shampoo. Shampoo?

"Rolph's shampoo is good because it comes off your neck slippery." he said. "Flex shampoo is good, too. You can put it on your neck or your forchead. But whatever you use, never put it on your hat or your glove because they're the two things they can take away from you." When a pitcher uses a slippery substance on a ball, he should always put it in the same place. "That way," the pitcher said, "if the umpire asks for the ball, the catcher always knows where it is and can wipe it off."

"Baseball is the very symbol the "Pitching in a Pinch," written by suspended 42-year-old Joe Niekto outward and visible expression of the Christy Mathewson. As Heywood: for 10 days for defacing baseballs Broun put it, writing in the New — the first such suspension in five York World in 1923, The tradition years and only the fourth in history of professional baseball always has since spitballs and the like were been agreeably free of chivalry. The outlawed back in the 1920s.

Niekro contended that the emery board and sandpaper that came out In many ways, that was the of his uniform when the umpire American rule of the 19th and early told him to empty his pockets were just there to trim his fingernails. A plausible denial, right? It's tough to it's scuff this and cork that, grease What goes around comes here and saliva there. The National round, they say. So perhaps it is League's 1986 Cy Young Award winner, Mike Scott, is almost universally assumed, within dugouts, to be a creation of illegal scuffed pitches, plus a new forkball. Rick Rhoden and Tommy John are reacan League's East Division; if they don't abrade the horsehide, then maybe nobody cheats.

Ask pitching coaches and veteran pitchers to guess how many hurlers cheat, at least occasionally, This incident happened in 1899 On Wednesday, American and estimates almost always range and is related in a book called League President Bobby Brown between one-third and one-half. The difference is that scofflaw behavior un longer seems to carry much stigma. As Cal Ripken Sr., the Orioles' manager, has noted, pitchers now cheat on any count, not just on a vital two-strike pitch with men on base.

Many fans feel considerable ambivalence about the sport's laissezfaire attitude toward the rule book. Something in almost all of us loves an outlaw, a rascal, if only his dar-ing and style are sufficiently maintained. That's not to say that most of our nature approves - just a part. A few generations ago, that passion for rapscallions was not so well hidden. America was halfproud of its desperadoes and gangsters, even as it printed wanted posters and organized manhunts. In our time, sports is one of the preserves within a civilized society vhere scofflaw emonions can feel at home and not be run entirely off the turf. We love to bear the story of Earl Weaver visiting a struggling Ross Grimsley at the mound and saying to the much suspected left-hander, "If you know how to cheat, start now.

Two old-timers give us what might be called the pure profes-sional view of cheating in baseball, "I'd always have [grease] in at least two places, in case the umpires would ask me to wipe off one, I never wanted to be caught out there without anything. It wouldn't be professional," wrote Gaylord Perry, the 300-game winner, in his book "Me and the Spitter." Former manager George Bam-berger once put the issue perfectly for all the Niekros and Scotts. "We do not play baseball," he said. "We play professional baseball. Amateurs play games. We are paid to win games. "There are rules, and there are consequences if you break them. If decide whether to cheat based on if it's 'right or wrong.' You base it on whether or not you can get away with it, and what the penalty might

"A guy who cheats in a friendly game of cards is a cheater. A pro who throws a spitball to support his family is a competitor."

That is the old voice of 19th century baseball, full of rush and push, boom and drive, an age of energy and can-do certainty, not of conscience and ambivalence. It charmed us then and still seduces us today.

It is a familiar voice, telling us that, if we only see things properly, dead wrong can be rationalized as perfectly all right.

It's the voice of Joe Niekro. And Oliver North.

He had been with them all. Him and the horn. Especially the horn, because sometimes he was so high he wasn't there and the born seemed to play

All his life, the born bad been a way out for him. Polio at age 3 confloed him to an iron lung; for a year after that be was paralyzed from the neck down, and today be has a barely noticeable bit of atropby in his left arm and right leg. But when he was 10 he beard Ray Charles on the radio with an alto sax man named Hank Crawford and he was knocked mit. Young David Sanborn picked up an alto saxophone and wandered into the no-man's-land of rhythm and blues joints in his hometown of St. Louis, Missouri. He played with people whose music made them feel free, blacks who poured their passion and soul toto the music, and be, too, learned to pour passion and soul into his born.

In the years that followed be also learned to pour "four to five" bottles of wine down his throat a day, and various drugs. Five years ago it caught up with him, and for the first time in his life his horn couldn't help him. He asked himself, "Do I want to get high, or dn I want to be a musician?" He decided on the latter, and quit drugs, alcohol, even caffeine. And while he was at it he quit being a sideman, too.

Which is why Sanborn is sitting to his nny Upper West Side apartment munching a carrot, five years and three Grammy Awards later, detoxed and healthy, host of a nationally syndicated U.S. jazz radio program, frequent guest with David Letter-man's "Late Night" band, and in the middle of a tour as the country's top jazzfusion saxophonist with a new album, "A Change of Heart."

Some say I'm too pop, too mass appeal," Sanborn said. "Others look on me as not mass appeal enough, But I play music on my records that I like. The concept I play in might not be particularly adventurous to some people, but I leel good about what I do. I gotta play what I gotta play. I Drugs flowed freely in the part of the business he saw. "In the early "70s, drugs seemed harmless," he said. "It was like a hig party. But by 74, 75, the drug scene got ugly. You'd be at a party and some guy would get up and say," and here Sanborn stands up, arms raised, and mimics a griming maniac - Wow man! Woooooow! You got any mose?

WOW!' And that guy would be me.

But while he lived in a world of rock (his solo on James Taylor's "How Sweet it is" remains a standard), Sanborn is, in essence, a jazzman who understands the intricacies of jazz and translates them into accessibility in the tradition of the rhythm and blues saxophonists Macco Parker, Ju-and blues sakephonesis that the late King Cortis.

Sanborn's playing embodies all of those influences, but his soaring, biting socied, and his ability to influe so much passion, anger and humor into his playing — to the point where it seems his alto can't contain. what he has to say - is what distinguish him from today's syrupy pop horn men like Kenny G. Najee or even Grover Washing-ton. His studio sound is patented, sought less successfully by studio horn men everywhere, and somehow more closely aligned with the playing of the alto juzzmen Phil

Woods and Paquito D'Rivers.

"I don't particularly think I'm an unovator," Sanborn said. "I have a certain way of playing that may have influenced some things. My music is more body or music, directly emotional, so in that sense it's more rhythm and blues. The music I make on my own, I would not call jazz. That's on my own, I would not call fazz. That's not to say I can't play in that environment. I happen to listen to a lot of become lit's intellectually and emotionally inspiring to me.
